The greatest and also the first of the great copper mining companies in the United States, which is the Calumet and Hecla of northern Michigan, is quoted as having decided to resume operation in those mines on April 1. But there is a "perhaps" contained in that announcement. For in order to operate these rich mines i; will be necessary to being many now scattered expert miners back. This, however, is a situation not ex-clusively confined to the Calumet and Hecla. It is one of the serious problems which the leaders in the copper industry of the United States are now facing and must solve if that industry is to be resumed in the
