AT THE THEATERS

HERE, as elsewhere over the Orpheum circuit, Florence "Buster" Santes and Jacque 'Mary Jane' Hayes are scoring a pronounced hit. With their lively and handsomely mounted revue they sre the stellar attraction time week at the Orpheum. Comedy is the chief element of the offering, Described as a vaudeville prescription, the attraction is in three scenes elseorately staged. It is an act with capitvating music, elever principals and bright dialogue. The stars make much of their comedy contrast for the one is expansively large while the other is very lean. They have the assistance of such well known dancers as Will Riggle, Bobbie Tremaine and Saul Marshall The show has two featured attractions; for one, Al and Fanny Steadman with their 'planocapers.' for the other, the extracrdinary ventriloquist, Marshall Montgomery. The demand for seats being hig, the management requests patrons to take up their orders as early as possible. Parents' Problems

Should children be allowed to read magazines primarily intended for

This depends in great degree on the kind of grownups for whom the magazines are intended. mere fact that they were published for adults is an unimportant detail. If a child is attracted by a magazine that presents morbid or sensational ideals of life, that upholds false standards of honor, or that handles with rough boldness subjects that should be treated with delicacy and reticence, I should question, not only whether it was good for the child, but whether it was good for the grownups. A blind and deaf Wisconsin girl has learned to receive messages by radio telephones by touching diaphragms with her fingers.

Jack and Jill

and Jack looked alarmed.
"Well, nothing horrid, darling.
But something that will give us food

Jack registered disagreement, but finally nodded, and with a quick kiss made a frenzied burst of speed for the all too distant station. They met for dinner in a city restaurant, at the end of the day, and Jill was agog with interest.

"What did you get tickets for, dear?" she demanded, as the check boy snatched Jack's hat and coat, "A very famous show, called 'The Crime Game,' sweetheart. It's by that noted English writer on socialism, and they say it's chuck full of new theories and tense drama of the

Jill furrowed her pretty brow, but had been her own selection, Yet he had a sense of foreboding. Her worst fears were fulfilled. It was a typical, made-in-Europe problem

There came a slight squeaking, as of a violin and an occasional rumbing of musical chords from the "arconcealed orchestra, which played between the acts. It was impossible to detect the tune played.
"Oh, worse and more of it,"
groaned Jack, during the second act," all these characters do is stand around the room and deliver lectures on social problems and eugenics and economics and brainstorms, Why don't they get busy and start a little

"Ssh, dearest, this is very intellectual. You are annoying the people about us," cautioned Jill, "All this is the new dramatic art."

In the third act, however, the noted playwright made up for any lack action shown in the first two. Now came a great riot at the mill scene, where-"too late"-the rich manufacturer was willing to erect fire escapes and raise the wages. Shot like a dog, his only son confessed to a great sin as the mob of workmen sprang upon the dishonest member of parliament, whose in-trigue with the daughter of a poor earl had caused the failure of a labor

As the final curtain came, more than half the cast were dead or dying, and Jill rose to her feet, her face wet with tears and her little hand linching Jack's arm.

"Isn't it sad?" she asked. "Well, dear, it had one good point. They didn't keep on talking, at any rate. Look, at the exit there they're selling copies of the novel which he wrote the play. Shall we buy one, and take it home to read over and talk about it and improve our minds."

"lack, dear!" And Jill was very much in earnest. "If you don't take me to some place where we can get club sandwich, a dance and some heerful jazz, before we catch the last train home, I'll be too tragic and downhearted to face our empty house. I'm scared of walking home through those dark streets now-I never want to remember this play. "Neither do I," said Jack. rather be happy than intellectual." So they went to a cabaret!
