

My Marriage Problems

Adapted from the New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife" (Copyright, 1921, by Newspaper Features Service, Inc.)

What Lillian and Madge Saw From the Window.

"Madge, are you awake?" Lillian's whisper roused me from the daze which I had guiltily snatched under my mother-in-law's very nose after Elizabeth and I had done "kitchen police," and had put the downstairs rooms in the order my exacting mother-in-law demanded.

The tasks she set us really amounted to a weekly house cleaning, for Mother Graham—as always when she gets a chance to have a free hand in the housekeeping—appeared possessed of a very devil of energy and fault-finding, and she found fresh evidences of Katie's fancied housewifely derelictions at every turn.

Her daughter, Elizabeth, did not open her mouth in speech once during the entire morning, and I guessed that the outward placidity of her face covered a sullen "grouch." But I was too tired and nervous to care what her usual attitude might be, and when I finally escaped to the upper floor, where Lillian had been playing the role of chambermaid, I flung myself on my bed and fell asleep almost instantly.

When I awoke, it seemed to me that I had dozed but a second or two, and my answer was almost impatient.

Lillian Awakens Madge. "Only just gone to sleep," I answered. "But come in."

"Only just slept an hour and a half," she said, coming up to the bed and smiling teasingly down at me, and I hate to disturb you, but I think Mother Graham is just about ready for you again. She has been engaged in teaching Mrs. Ticer how to wash tub silk blouses for the last hour or so. And I fancy she sees that the gifted Mrs. T. is about at the boiling point, and intends to give you and Elizabeth another whirl. I feel like a piker to escape all the ragging, but as I'm neither a relation nor a hireling, I suppose she considers me immune.

"What are the children doing?" I asked, yawning lazily.

"That's what I'm here for," she returned. "I don't want you to miss it, so come into my room, to the window, before Mother Graham gets hold of you."

I scurried into the room assigned Lillian, one window of which gives a view of the front lawn and garden. "Don't let them catch you looking at them," she admonished. "You know what self-conscious beings children are."

We posted ourselves accordingly, one on either side of the window and peered out from the curtain upon the tempestuous gathering below.

"I feel exactly like Rebecca reporting to Iwanhoe!" Lillian chuckled. "Look at that!"

"What Can You Do?" "That," was evidently a "parade," headed by Jerry Ticer, sheepishly grinning, but evidently enjoying himself hugely. With an automobile blanket draped around him, a big towel wound around his head, and a whip in his hand, he led an old cavalry horse—Jerry the great one—on a session and the great pride-in and out imaginary streets. Clinging tightly to the horse's mane was Roderick, Mrs. Harrison's youngest, an adorable but palpably uneasy little figure in blue rompers.

His two brothers marched next, attired in various brilliantly colored articles, among which I recognized with dismay one of my pet pieces of Chinese embroidery.

Marion brought up a rather ignominious rear, pulling a refractory colie by a rope. But her face was shining with the joy of the dramatic which is ingrained in her, and she evidently had no thought as yet that she was, in child parlance, being "put upon."

But Mary Harrison! "Solomon in all his glory!" Lillian murmured, as Elizabeth's eldest daughter flashed across the lawn on a bicycle, and after riding up and down at the side of the parade, suddenly called: "Halt!" and riding more slowly, gradually lifted herself until she was balanced skilfully, if a bit unconventionally, upon the handlebars. She held the pose for a second, then leaped to the ground, curtsied low, and threw kisses right and left with all the aplomb of a seasoned circus equestrienne.

She evidently had commandeered with or without her mother's knowledge, her very best dancing frock, a striking thing of scarlet chiffon, which I privately thought much too pronounced for a child, but which I had to admit suited her dusky elfin face. A scarf of the same material was wound tightly around her forehead, with one end floating in the breeze, while her thin brown legs were encased in scarlet silk hosiery and white leather pumps.

Around her neck was a necklace of quaintly hand-carved beads of a slumberous red, which I recognized as one of her mother's choicest possessions, and I wondered if Elizabeth had carried her theories of "developing the play spirit" to the extent of allowing Mary to wear the cherished ornament.

"Now the performance is ready to begin," Mary announced in loud tones. "Marion, you go now and be the audience."

"All right," Marion responded cheerfully. "But when am I going to perform?"

"You're not going to perform," Mary retorted decisively. "What can you do?"

Woman, 87, Sues for Deed Obtained in Strange Manner. In a petition filed in the district court yesterday, Mrs. Mary E. Porter, 87, charges that she lost the deed to her property because she was unable to read "some papers" presented for her signature. Mrs. Porter's home is at 2530 California street. Elmer L. Barr, Creighton medical graduate, and son of her niece, is the person now holding the deed to the property.

Potash Trial Set. Trial of the Masse, Wohberg, McWhorter and Chipley quartet on charges connected with promotion of the William Berg Potash company, was definitely set yesterday by Federal Judge Woodrough for Monday, February 27.

Says Country Could Lead in Olive Growing. F. Shurtleff, Los Angeles, one of the leaders in the California olive industry, was the principal speaker at the weekly meeting of the Kiwanis club at Hotel Rome at noon yesterday.

In his talk Mr. Shurtleff described the olive industry, how they were grown and prepared for consumption. He said 90 per cent of the olives consumed in America are foreign-grown.

Many acres of idle land in the south could be utilized for the growing of olives, as the climatic conditions are ideal, he said. The United States could take the lead in the olive industry, he said, if these idle lands were planted with olives.

Bishop E. V. Shaylor was elected a member of the club at the meeting. Vocal solos were sung by Harry Disbrow and H. L. Hobbs.

EDWIN W. FIELD.

"I'm convinced if I had taken Tanlac two years ago, when my troubles first began, I would have been saved a world of suffering," said Ed W. Field, 538 Jefferson St., Milwaukee, Wis.

"My case proved that when a man's stomach goes wrong, everything goes wrong with him. The first thing I noticed out of the way was loss of appetite and next, that no matter how sparingly I ate, I was sure to have an attack of indigestion. I finally got so I couldn't walk a couple of blocks without having to stop and rest and I was so nervous that often I sat up in a chair all night long."

"Tanlac has made a new man out of me, my stomach is as sound as a dollar and I feel fine all the time. I am a firm believer in Tanlac because I know it delivers the goods."

Note—The International Proprietaries Co., distributors of Tanlac, have on file in their offices in New York City over fifty thousand signed statements from representative men and women from every state in the Union and every Province in Canada. Many of these are from prominent people in this city and section and have been previously published in this paper.

Tanlac is sold in Omaha by the Sherman & McConnell Drug Co. and by leading druggists everywhere.
