Ball players are more prone than the average reader to believe all they see in the newspapers, because most of the players conectrate on the box scores, which they know are accurate, and the batting aver-ages, which they know are compiled by careful statisticians.

As all such contracts must be filed with the commissioner, to be valid, there is no chance of deception in most cases, and the limit is so high now that there will be little excuse for cheating.

But the abuse of the option contract is one of the chief bones of contention between majors and minors, and probably always will be.
