PERSONALS.

EliTH-You should see the lovely ma-nogany furniture! hought to match the rest of my set. My bid was the highest on it at the Stephenson Auc-tion Saturday afternoon, I was really surprised at the crowd of people who attend their sales, Well-to-do women and poor people were there to buy, ac-curding to the needs for their respective homes. You should go next Tuesday and Wednesday. (Signed) Emily.

(Copyright: 1812.) The Way Madge Stole a March on Dicky.

If I had struck Dicky a vicious blow in the face I don't believe I could have more effectively banished the dancing laughter from his face and eyes than I did by my icy rejoinder to his banter concerning my projected journey to bring

The better part of my nature urged me to cry out an apology for my hasty words, but the memory of the unjust criticism of me Dicky had uttered at the time of his motiser's accident chilled any generous impulse toward him, and made me instead wickedly rejoice in the anger I saw leap to his face.

"If I had such a case of ingrowing "Who is she?" Master Meadow Mouse asked his new friend.

"Mish Succept"—" Moses Mouse explained—"Mish Succept is our name for Mish Sitty Cat. She lives in the farmhouse. And when she isn't indoors she's usually prowling about the yard."

To the great astonishment of Moses Mouse, the short-tailed stranger seemed in to wise startled by his news.

Dicky Is Angry. "What did you do to the kitten?" "Pardon me." I interrupted, with Moses Mouse inquired with great a frigidity that justified the statement he had just made, "but I have "I bit her nose," said Master a good deal to do before I can start after Katie, so I wish you would Moses Mouse gazed at him with give me some idea of how long you mean this lecture to last. "Don't try that on the old lady," course, desirous of listening as long he cried. "If you do, you'll be as I can, but..." "Oh, go to the devil!" Dicky snarled and flung himself out of the room angrily, while with the per-versity which only a woman knows, I first laughed with malicious glee at the success of my baiting, then felt my eyes fill with tears of regret at my mean little folly,

That I had succeeded in thoroughly angering him I realized as the evening wore away-or rather galloped away-while I made my preparations for the earliest possible start the next day. Dicky devoted himself to his mother, although there was little to do but watch her, for exhausted by her ordeal she slept, though fitfully, through the entire night. But he spoke no word to me beyond the barest necessit of speech, nor did I try to placate aim. There was no use, I felt, in making any offers to do so for when Dicker. any effort to do so, for when Dicky is angered it usualty takes him hours to get over it, and, to tell the truth, I was so busy and so wor-ried that I had neither the time nor the inclination to attempt to change his attitude. All my thoughts were centered upon my coming excursion with its chances of success so overwhelmingly against me. "Stop the Car!" One by one the items on the list of things that must be adjusted her fore leaving were crossed off.
