Problems That Perplex

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Too Young to Marry.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am a mard woman with five children. We limit to go with boys you will find ways of conveying the information to them. are just poor people and can hardly make a living. My husband works in the packing house and we are in the packing house and we are understanding on the engagement and piece down the front of the coat paying for a home. In addition to before you let the young man asour five children we are supporting sume the privileges of a fiance.

Cut bands of black velvet ribbon one our five children we are supporting a 15-year-old orphan girl. Her widded of mine and just before she died four years ago I promised her that I would care for her almost as much as one of our own children. Now, Miss prairfax, here is my problem. A man 41 years old, who is a widower with six children, the oldest a girl 12 years old and the youngest 3 years old, wants to marry our orphan girl. He claims that he loves her and while I am sure that she doesn't know what love is, she is certainly infatuated with him. He is a wealthy farmer and lives in the country. She would have a lovely home and I guess that he could buy home and I guess that home and I guess that he could buy her most anything, but considering the difference in their ages and she heing so young, do you think I would be doing my duty to give my would be doing my duty to give my consent? But we did not adopt the girl. She just came to live with us and we never even thought of it. Now as things are could we prevent their marriage by with-holding our consent?

Please tell us, Miss Fairfax, what you think our duty is to the girl.

Please tell us, Miss Fairfax, what you think our duty is to the girl and to her dead mother, whom I faithfully promised I would care for the girl. Would it be necessary to have the girl's consent in order to adopt her now?

A girl of 15 is too young to marry.

The difference in age between this girl and the man is more than is girl and the man is more than is desirable, but if she were 30 and he 56 the case would be different.

A khaki skirt are better.

You don't have to have boy rivened, but real girls that mean everything and help you through thick and thin.

I am a girl who has friends, girl friends, that help and understand. We don't go to dances or go with boys, but we girls go together out through the country and we have a good time.

You may think that we're olddesirable, but if she were 30 and he 55 the case would be different, though the same difference would wear our hair in a braid. though the same difference would be same difference would exist. Encourage her to wait until Tes, it's best to be young as long she is 18 or 20. I do not think as you can; you'll always have memories of the fond old days, when you over the girl.

"Like a Child."

I would like to have your advice on this question. I have sent a birthday card to my sister-in-law's sister for fun. But I find out now that she did not take if for fun.

There is a married man here in town and I wrote a birthday card addressed to her from him. She does not like him. She asked this man about the card and of course he said he did not write it. Should I tell her I wrote it or be silent?

And then also, Miss Fairfax, I do not care to go with boys, so how can I let them know. Just tell them right out or what? I have many boy friends, but I am like a child of 12 and instead I am 17.

ME.

You seem to like to think of yourself as childish. Better overcome it or you will find yourself a silly old thing about the time you are 40. Some women never get over the idea that they are just "like a child" and it is not very becoming when they are old enough to know better. It is what psychologists call "infan-tility."

By all means tell the truth about the card. I think if you recally do the card. I think if you really do hair.

Bright Future for Drama A Silly Song MacGowan Tells Omaha

"I have been attacked, said the speaker, "for saying that dialogue would be unnecessary to future play-writers. I didn't say it. If dialogue alone is permitted to the playwright he is crippled. Lighting and color, combined with dialogue, enrich the drama.'

The technique of writing plays has changed, Mr. MacGowan stated Authors are writing more episodically, using many scenes, using plots within plots, going backward or for-ward in time as they like, and to prove his point the speaker quoted recent successes such as "Redemp-tion," "The Yellow Jacket," "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and "Under Cov-MacGowan sees the influence of the moving pictures in this great-er fluidity. "People get used to sudden changes of scene and time and they like it," he said.

"After all, Shakespeare's stage was almost as fluid as the movies. Ham-let has 20 scenes and Macbeth 29, and no one seems to care.'

His interpretation of the new expressionist movement in Germany which is going on in both art and literature seemed to interest Mr. Mac-Gowan's hearers, "The new artist tries to paint his own feeling," he explained, "not his feeling about something, but just his feeling. The story deals with Mr. Wattles' boylood in New York state and pioneer days in Iowa, his education at Iowa State college, his business career and home life. The volume also contains chapters on his travels in Europe, the Orient, this country and Mexico, and on his public services one of the directors of the exposition held here in '98, was one of the founders of Ak-Sar-Ben, and was one of the chief organizers of the Omaha Grain exchange. During the war he was connected with Red Cross work and was also state food administrator.
