

My Marriage Problems

Adeline Garrison's New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

The Way Dicky Revealed Surprising Facts to Madge.

Dicky's rough unsmiling with its suppressed note of displeasure—suppressed, I knew, because of my injury—effectually extinguished my little blaze of childish temper and gave me a desire to make amends to my husband for my churlishness.

"I'm sorry, Dicky," I said humbly. "I didn't mean to be horrid, but—" His first answer was a tightening of his arms about me, a roughly tender kiss. Then he stared at me a bit curiously.

"Some time in the course of the next hundred years or so," he said, with more than a touch of exasperation in his voice, "I'm going to take a month or two off and find out just what's in the back of your head concerning poor old Ed, that you froth at the mouth every time there's a remark concerning anybody or anything in the same county with her."

"Well—all right," Dicky assented reluctantly. "But call me if you want anything."

"Oh, surely," I returned, hoping that Dicky would not notice my feverish eagerness to get him out of the room.

For the revelation that he had given me concerning his knowledge of my antipathy to Edith Fairfax had shaken me deeply. I wondered if he had spoken as he had because of my little outburst, or if his odd little speech was the result of long and keen observation and deduction on his part, or my reactions towards Edith's name and presence. I shrank from the latter hypothesis fearfully.

It was but the work of two or three minutes for me to arrange my hair so as to cover my discolored forehead as much as possible, and slip on my gown. My mirror told me so sad a story, however, that I dreaded to enter my dressing room and encounter even the friendly eyes of Dicky and Dr. McDermott.

I need not have feared, however. They rose perfunctorily when I entered, and the physician made his conventional professional inquiries. Then they returned to the animated conversation in which they had been engaged when I entered, and which I soon discovered to be composed wholly of active service reminiscences.

I might as well have been back in Sag Harbor for any attention they paid to me, a fact for which I was truly grateful. Of course, they never omitted the perfunctory courtesies which to men like them are reflex actions rather than thought-controlled ones, but beyond those, I do not think either man had any actual knowledge of my presence at the table. It was "Did you see?" and "Do you remember?" and "Were you at—" and all the other queries which one ex-service man puts to another when they have a chance to talk undisturbed.

Maybe So—Maybe Not. It was like listening to a saga of the old Norse warriors, and I found myself unconsciously falling into as worshipfully humble an attitude toward my husband as any wife of that long ago time and clime could have held.
