Problems That Perplex Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A Last-Minute Jilt. Dear Miss Fairfax: Last summer a young man asked to be introduced to me. After the introduction he courted me most ardently and showered me with gifts. He then left town for a number of months and each day I received love letters and telegrams from him. We were secretly engaged and the day before I was to get my ring he told me he could not marry me, as he didn't love me. Can you make this out? I can't. It is beyond me.

The matter may be as simple as it appears. The man found in knowing you well that what he had taken for love was infatuation. He may have burned his feelings out in a wild outpouring of emotions which couldn't settle down to steady devotion. He may have some difficulty in his way and feel that he isn't ready for marriage. But since he has told you with brutal frankness that he does not love you, you are fortunate not to be tied to one who could not make you happy.

No Cause for Jealousy. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am engaged to a young man who lives out of town. I was going to a picnic in my town and as I was at the box office getting my ticket a friend was also going in and paid my way. I could not see any more of you once we got into the theater. Indirectly I told this occurrence to my fiance and he took it entirely differently. He says should not have allowed this man to pay my admission. My fiance knows of my friendship with this gentleman before I met him. FLO. The man who paid for your ticket was offering you a casual courtesy. Often the mere acquaintance will pay your car fare and think no more of it than he does of standing aside and letting you walk ahead of him when passing out of a door. For you to protest against the young man's paying for your ticket would have been to give the matter entirely too much importance. He thought nothing of it, as is proven by his not joining you in the theater. And if he had followed up this chance meeting by coming and sitting next to you at the picture, I'm sure this would not have affected your loyalty and devotion to the man you love.

Wrong Man and Right. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 18. Recently I met a young man who has been very attentive to me and who is a fine man. He tells my friends he loves me. I respect him, but I have met another man whom I consider my "ideal." I like him very much, and I know he cares a lot for me. Am I right in going with the first man? I imagine I am really raising his future plans, but wasn't it right to tell him of my meeting with the second man? He took it to heart, that I could see, but said I should use my own judgment. So I am awaiting my answer from you. A CONSTANT READER.

You could do no more than a worse injustice than to marry him when you don't care for him. And if you have met the man for whom you feel you can care, you have less than ever a chance to force yourself to respond to the feelings of the first man. Be honest not only with the man for whom you don't care, but with yourself.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES THE TALE OF THE MULEY COW BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

CHAPTER V. The Friendly Scarecrow. Old Mr. Crow and all his cronies made fun of the scarecrow in the cornfield. They said that he was a great joke. "He doesn't know anything," they used to chuckle. "His head has nothing but straw inside it."

My Marriage Problems

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

How Midge and Dicky Found Katie. Luckily there's a side entrance to this restaurant.

Without appearing to notice it, I knew that Dicky was contemplating my black eye ruefully, dreading our entrance into even so unpretentious an establishment as the one before us, where we expected to find Katie.

The Muley Cow wondered. And then all at once she gave a silly sort of giggle. "I know!" she exclaimed. "He wants me to dance with him!"

The Waiter Is Amused. I followed him tremulously into the side door of the restaurant, which held less than half a dozen customers in all.

Heaviest Hiker Nears City on Transcontinental Walk

Frank O. Meek, the world's heaviest hiker is nearing Omaha on a walk from Danville, Ill., to the Pacific coast.

So he notifies The Bee in a letter from Boone, Ia. "Well, I am still alive after doing 521 miles since leaving Danville," writes Frank. "I am just 160 miles from your office now and will be there in about a week."

"Meesis Graham!" Then he turned his glance on Dicky, measuring him, and there was more than curiosity. It was distinct admiration and respect that shone in his wrinkled old face.

"You're not ill, I hope?" she ventured, as she stepped over the railing. He paid not the slightest heed to her. So with her nose the Muley Cow touched him where a knee would have been had he had any.
