My Marriage Problems

Adele Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

The Reason Madge Racked Her Memory.

"What's the matter with the car?" I struggled valiantly to make my voice as matter-of-fact as Dicky's had sounded. I saw that he had dismissed our recent tempestuous adventure as if it never had occurred, and I resolved to match his apparent nonchalance with equal poise.

"I knew, I wouldn't have been doubting as a dachshund just now," he retorted with a rueful glance at his natty suit, which showed the effects of his crawling beneath his car. "The blamed thing simply died at first out there. Luckily it gave me a few dying gasps to warn me, and I was able to tote it in here out of the road. But I don't know for the life of me what the trouble is—carburetor trouble, I suppose."

"Is there anything I can do?" I asked innocently enough, but Dicky's sour glance showed that my query had irritated him. However, there was no trace of his annoyance in his answer. Perhaps the remembrance of the last hour or two was more vivid than I had thought.

with his assertion of knowing my father and me. The bustle following my homecoming had been such that I had had no opportunity to go over the incidents of my journey and try to fit them together as one would the pieces of a picture puzzle. And yet I felt that the complete pattern was there if I could but find a missing piece or two which something told me my memory ought to supply.

Vague Memories. It was maddening this sense of something which I ought to know, but which was just beyond my grasp. I carefully went over every minute of my enforced association with the mysterious foreigner, trying to recall every detail of his appearance.

He had been unusually tall and well-built, his abundant hair was white, his mustache and imperial—which I had decided were a disguise—were also white, his eyebrows—

I was glad, indeed, of the chance to pull myself together after the nervous strain and shock of the past hour or two. Resolutely, however, I put out of my mind the quarrel with Dicky. I had left nothing settled as to my aiding Lillian, but I guessed that Dicky would be as willing to compromise his position on that as I secretly was, and therefore we could find a common meeting ground upon the proposition. So I gave myself up to the lure of the autumn woods stretching around me on every side and revelled in the rich sensuous

Epworth League Dinner. The young people of the Epworth league, First Methodist church, will give their annual dinner Friday evening at the church parlors. It will be a carnival affair, with streamers and balloons of blue and yellow, favors and place cards. The new minister, Dr. J. W. G. Fast, and Mrs. Fast will be honor guests, as will the superintendent of the Sunday School, Ford Hovey, and Mrs. Hovey. Dr. Fast will speak, the Y. M. C. A. quartet will sing and the Wops' orchestra will play.

Chairman of the committee in charge is Miss Ethelwynne Hodge, and on her committee are Miss Dell Kern, Miss Evelyn Ennis and Richard Cole. This is the last of a series of dinners given this winter by the Epworth league.

Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Friendship and Love. Dear Miss Fairfax: Six months ago I met a young man at a dance. He lives a long way off and I really know nothing about him. Our friendship after a couple of months terminated in love, and while he acts the attentive lover he never talks of marriage. Now, he comes to see me about twice a week. Is it not strange that he should not wish to see me often if he cares so much? He has made me promises of taking me to different places and to get me different things, and has not kept one.

Should I place our relation entirely on a "friendship" foundation until he "comes down to brass tacks"? I have never gone with another man. What do you think of his broken promises? He is very fine, and although he does not talk seriously, in little, veiled words he lets me know that I am the "one girl."

Don't consider this man as a possible lover. A girl must know far more of a man she thinks of marrying than you understand of this man. Remain on a basis of friendship. If he wants to be taken seriously, my dear, he must speak seriously. Don't deceive yourself. Men often make a little idle love to a girl who attracts them and see no harm in it. But if the girl doesn't hold herself high she is all too likely to know heartache and disappointment. You can be good friends—provided you handle the situation well.

A Secret Sutor. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am going about with a young man and he keeps asking me to marry him. Now, don't you think a chap as serious as that ought to introduce a girl to his parents and tell her how he stands in the line of money, position, etc. But, no, he never does. Why, I don't even know what his profession is.

I think a great deal of him and it troubles me not to have him ask me to his home or tell me of his financial position, so that I can plan and decide, because I have other offers besides his.

A CONSTANT READER. Your not meeting the man's people need not worry you. There is
