My Marriage Problems

Adele Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

Lillian's Visitor. I watched with tense interest for Katie to emerge from her room after her interview with Lillian. And when Katie finally came back to the kitchen I was relieved to see that she was outwardly composed, and would, no doubt, be able to go on with her daily routine without any emotional outbreak. But her pallor, the strained expression of her eyes, her occasional furtive glances from side to side, as if she were in deadly fear of some terrible menacing thing appearing suddenly beside her, told me that she was suffering mental tortures because of having "broken her secret" to Lillian and confided to her the information concerning the mysterious man now in the hospital, which Lillian counted of so much importance in the government investigation in which she was engaged. My heart was very tender and very pitiful toward my devoted little maid, whose love for my child and me had proved stronger than her centuries-inherited fear of the "black magic" with which the man in the hospital had threatened her, and I resolved to do the utmost in my power to banish from her brain the fear which was obsessing her. I counted much upon her volatile nature, believing that not the fear of death "nor any other creature" could absolutely subdue Katie. If I could only divert her mind in some way. As if in answer to my thought, Lillian's little speech flashed into my mind. "We can only mark time," she had said. "I'm at your service for any diversion your heart desires—I think a little figurative jazz will do you good."

Madge's Plan. An excursion of one day or two to the ocean beach—this was the first project to come to my mind. Within easy motoring distance lay miles and miles of wonderful sandy beaches upon which the real ocean beat gayly or sullenly, according to its mood—beat with never a sandbar or rock between the shore and that of the European continent 3,000 miles away.

In the preparations for such a trip, most of which would fall upon Katie's shoulders, the girl would find no time for reflection or retrospection. And that, she would be free to enjoy the air, the beach and the waves than hers. Katie is a true gypsy at heart, and her love of the out-of-doors has always been a strong link between us.

I had been so busy with Junior and Mother Graham, following Katie's return to the kitchen, that I had not noticed what Lillian was doing, whether, indeed, she were in the house or not. And when, full of my little scheme for our relaxation, I looked for her, I found her sitting on a garden bench underneath the giant elm, the pride of the place, talking earnestly to a slender but well-built headress of silver ribbon, finished with silver grapes. The bridesmaids' gowns were like that of Miss Cavanaugh. Miss Lillian Head wore pale green; Miss Winifred Smith, fuchsia shade, and Miss Gussie Reinert of Hartford, Conn., French blue. Their headresses were of silver ribbon and French flowers. They carried arm bouquets which harmonized with their gowns.

Frank Wilkin of Denver was best man. The ushers were Lawrence McCague, George Metcalfe and Russell Brandt, brother of the bride.

Mrs. Brandt, mother of the bride, wore black brocade crepe and the mother of the groom, Mrs. Hunsaker, was gowned in gray satin and lace.

J. H. Simms played the wedding march. An informal reception followed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Hunsaker will return June 1 from their honeymoon trip and will reside at the Marley apartments.

Methodist Mission Society. The Foreign Missionary society of the Hancock Park Methodist church will have its monthly luncheon with Mrs. Arthur Fetters, 2711 Poppleton avenue, Friday, at 12 o'clock.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES THE TALE OF NIMBLE DEER BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

CHAPTER VI. An Unexpected Party. Nimble's mother's plans went all awry. She had expected to give her son a treat by taking him quietly to Farmer Green's carrot patch, so that he might have his first taste of carrots. So it wasn't strange that it upset her a bit when she found that there were dozens of other folks all ready and waiting to go along with them.

One extra member of the party wouldn't have displeased her, especially when that one was Jimmy Rabbit. But she had never gone near the farm buildings with more than two others. And she didn't intend to break her rule now. Besides, it annoyed her above all to know that her son had spread the news of the excursion far and wide. "Did you invite these people?" she asked Nimble in a low voice. "No! oh, no!"

"Then what brings them here?" she demanded. "Their legs, I suppose," he replied. "Be careful!" she said. "Be very careful!"

Then Nimble began to whine. And that was something he almost never did. "They said they'd like to come," he told his mother. "And I said maybe you wouldn't mind."

"Well, I do mind," she declared firmly. "When I take a child to the carrot patch for the first time I don't want company. One of this crowd is more than likely to rouse old dog Spot. And we can't have him ranging around while we are dining."

"Then tell everybody to go home," Nimble suggested. "Tell them to go 'way'!"

"No!" said his mother. "That wouldn't be polite." Mr. and Mrs. George Eggers are in Chicago for several days.

Many memories were revived for Omahans Wednesday evening at the wedding of Miss Winifred Brandt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur G. Brandt, and James Hunsaker. Problems That Perplex

He Is on the Defensive. Dear Miss Fairfax: I read your advice in The Bee daily and as you have helped so many that were in trouble similar to mine, I decided to write to you for advice. I am a high school girl, considered very good looking and have always been very well liked among the boys. Now several months ago a new young man came to town and seemed to fall for me at first sight. He never confessed his love for me, but through his actions I was convinced of his love. He never called at my home but I would meet him down town every afternoon and we grew to be real pals, but lately he has grown indifferent. I still meet him every day but he seems to take no interest in me. I have been told that he is engaged to a girl from his home town, but he has never mentioned it to me. I am heartbroken. What should I do? Should I tell him how I feel toward him and have an understanding or try to forget him (which I fear is impossible). I will take no further steps until I hear from you in advance. I remain, most sincerely, HEAVEN EYES. I hope you will take no further steps" even after you hear from me. It seems to me you have been quite aggressive enough. If the young man is really engaged to you, it is best to let it go with words and you won't have to assume so much. How do you know he "fell" for you at first sight? How do you know he loved you, even though he never said so? It is very difficult for a man to keep from declaring a love he sincerely (and sometimes insincerely) feels. When he doesn't commit himself, there is usually a reason. In this particular case, I judge he is really engaged to another girl and is trying to be faithful to her. Your boldness evidently swept him off his feet for a brief time, but he seems now to have gathered strength enough to defend himself.
