Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Love Is Not All of Life. Dear Miss Fairfax: I have been an interested reader of your columns for some months. I was especially interested this winter in one article signed by a Business Girl, who was desirous of a good companion. I am 22, have been with the same concern for the past eight years, had a little marriage experience that did not prove to be happy, which I'm sure was wisdom for us to separate. No other woman in the case, but simply incompatibility. I love a home, also like outdoor sports, fishing, etc., enjoy piano music and like a girl who is modern though sensible. Do you think I am entitled to the love of some young lady who has never been married though I have had one unfortunate experience, or should I seek the company of one who perhaps likewise lost her first companion through death or divorce. I am slow to make acquaintance with girls but would enjoy meeting a real little pal through some source. Am not ashamed of my past.

GENTLEMAN. I do not make acquaintances for people through these columns. I don't like your remark about a "little marriage experience." It seems to me it was a big one, and a tragedy. I wouldn't condemn you, however, without knowing more of the case. I hope you may yet know true love and happiness. If you are to marry again, I would suggest that you marry some one you can truly love. Whether she had been married or not before or had had an experience similar to your own, would have nothing to do with the case. Love is not a matter of duty or honor; it is great.

Old Violin. Dear Beatrice Fairfax: I am coming to you with a problem that I hope you will solve for me and answer it at your earliest convenience. Here it is: Some 21 years ago a stranger came through this part of the world, "broke," and he sold to me his only violin. It was a most beautiful one. Now it has letters inside inscribed like this: "Nicolaus Amatus fell in Cremona 1612." Now can you tell me how old this violin is? I have in my mind of owning a very old "violin," am I right? Answer this in your column of The Bee as soon as possible. I am signed "ANXIOUS."

The inscription inside probably means that the violin you have was made after the model by Nicolaus Amatus made in Cremona in 1610. There is about a chance in a million that yours is an original. The original old violins are practically all accounted for. Your violin is Delta Theta Phi. Friday, May 12, is founder's day of Delta Theta Phi legal fraternity. All chapters throughout the country are celebrating that date. The Bryan senate of Creighton university is planning a celebration. A dance is to be held Friday, May 12, at Happy Hollow. Saturday, May 13, a banquet will be given at the University club. All members of the fraternity as well as the alumni of Creighton university, together with all the other Delta Theta Phis in the community will be in attendance. William Jennings Bryan, in whose honor the chapter is named, is expected to attend. Chief Justice Morrissey has already accepted an invitation to be present and to respond to a toast. Sunday, May 14, has been selected as a day of general outing for the members. A picnic is to be held some distance out from Omaha. The Nebraska university law students have been granted a Delta Theta Phi chapter and May 7 the Creighton chapter will drive down and initiate the various candidates. They are giving a banquet in honor of the visitors and it is highly probable that they will be extended an invitation to attend the three-day celebration at Omaha upon the above mentioned dates.

Successful Affair. The women of Auxiliary B of All Saints church realized $600 from their Saturday bazaar. One hundred dollars of this amount came from the Brownell Hall candy booth. Members of the committee for this successful affair were Mrs. S. S. Oakford, Mrs. Sam Carlisle, Mrs. Sam Caldwell, Mrs. Sam Burns and Mrs. Franklin Shotwell.

My Marriage Problems

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

Luncheon was all that Katie had promised it would be. Perfectly cooked, perfectly served, it was a meal to delight the palate of an epicure. To a normally hungry man such as Tom Chester it was a delight so patent that Lillian and I smiled maternally at each other when at our urging he nearly fulfilled Katie's prophecy of the "tree, four plates" of chickens and fixings. "I am really ashamed of myself," Mrs. Graham," he said boyishly, when Katie's culinary climax, the shortcake of everbearing strawberries had vanished. "But I have been out in the open air ever since my early breakfast, and everything is so good it tastes as my mother's cooking used to taste."

"There was a little catch in his voice, quickly smothered, which told us, if we had not before known the fact from village chatter, that Tom Chester's mother had stopped cooking for her beloved boy, and had been laid to rest in the quaint old churchyard on the hill. And no woman who is a mother, needs to be told that I suddenly found a lump in my own throat as I visualized the possibility of my own little lad, grown up, motherless and missing me."

"Don't apologize for giving the cook so perfect a tribute," I said gayly, to hide the emotion which his reference had brought to me. "You'll learn when you set up house-keeping for yourself that nothing so distresses a hostess as the possessor of a finicky appetite." "I'm afraid I'll never be lucky enough to get a hostess who can plan a dinner like this," he answered with a diffident little laugh. His honest, boyish eyes pointed his meaning. "If you're sure—"

I saw Lillian smile as if involuntarily to herself, and then I saw something else, also—my mother-in-law's glare of disapproval, not at young Mr. Chester, but at me. It was as if a shadow had fallen across my pleasant luncheon table, taking away all the enjoyment I had felt in entertaining the youth.

who had rendered us so signal a service. I felt chilled, self-conscious, and found myself actually flusing in wretched embarrassed fashion, as I tried to answer Mr. Chester's innocent sally. "Thank you," I began, and was grateful indeed when Lillian struck in—I was sure with intention—saving me the necessity of further speech. "I'm sorry to have to give my well-known imitation of Simon Legree cracking his whip," she said, "but if you're positively sure, Mr. Chester, that you can't swallow another morsel—" she pushed back her chair.

He took the hint, rose with her, and with thoughtful courtesy pulled back my chair for me—he was seated next me—then bent over Mother Graham. "Thank you, young man," she said grimly, with a chilliness of manner that I think quite astonished our guest, but I think I shall stay right here for a little bit. I want another cup of tea. Margaret, Mrs. Underwood do not need you, and I've got something to say to you."

Behind her back Lillian flashed me an understanding commiserating look. "But I do need her, Mother Graham—badly," she said, "although I don't need her for a few minutes. You won't have to keep her longer than 10 minutes, will you?" "What I have to say won't take three," my mother-in-law retorted tartly, and with a patently puzzled face, and a courteous boyish bow, Tom Chester escorted Lillian out of the room. Marion had been given luncheon with Junior at a little table on the veranda, the mode of eating which most delights her, so that my mother-in-law and I were left alone. I felt a little shiver of apprehension go over me, for I felt that "in my bones," as Katie says, that she was going to be especially disagreeable.

She did not leave me long in doubt. Putting up her lorgnette, she surveyed me grimly for a long minute, then lowered it to say caustically: "I didn't know but you were sick-

In other towns the churches change their person once a year, but Sody Springs is satisfied and Parson Good stays here. He prays for us folks, and eats our chicken soup too; nor does he tell the booze hounds where we keep our stock of brew. We like him for this reason, but there is one greater still, why he will be our parson till he sleeps on Zion's hill. The voice of Parson Good is low, and soothing as can be, he does not make the rafters ring and that twist you and me, as why he always has a job right here in Sody Springs, for while he preaches of hell's fire, we dream of harps and wings and though the meaning of his words might make the angels weep, he does not say them loud enough to bother us who sleep. There's a difference in Milk—Therefore. IMAGINE feeding your child skimmed milk, or no milk at all. The lack of nutrition would be apparent within a few days. That's why the milk in BETSY ROSS Bread is important to "grownups" as well as to children, for it contributes much to the food value of the loaf. Many brands of bread are baked either with no milk at all or with only skimmed milk. That is one reason why they can be sold at a lower price. The best way to be sure of a milk-made loaf and its high food value is to buy BETSY ROSS.
