Is it imperative under the rules to drop a ball over the shoulder, when it has been lifted for any reason?  A. Yes, where the rules provide that a ball be dropped, the player himself must drop it, over his shoulder, while standing so that he faces the hole.  Q. A road crosses the fairway of one of the holes on our course. In a recent match my opponent's ball stopped in the road, but before he reached it the wheel of an automobile knocked it out on the fairway. He losisted on playing it from where it lay on the fairway. Was he right?  A. No, the ball should have been dropped as near as possible to where it was when the automobile struck it.  Q. The batter makes a safe hit to left and the runner on third scores. The runner on first fails to touch second and is declared out. Does the run count?  A. The run does not count because the runner on first was forced out. He must touch second base as the batter has the right to first.  Q. The ball is batted and hits a stone on fair ground in front of the third baseman and bounds back to the catcher in foul ground. It is fair or foul?  A. It is foul even though it be a line hit. Unpires must not call it fair because it is a line hit. The character of the hit makes no difference.  Q. The fielder stands on the line with the ball in hand to touch the runner. The latter drops to the ground and the fielder fails over him. What is the decision?  A. If the umpire though it deliberate interference on the part of the runner the latter is out. It is what is known as "a decision of personal judgment."  Q. The catcher touched the bat of the batsman with his glove but claimed that it was accidental. Should the batter be declared out?  A. No. There can be no discrimination about the kind of interferences. Any interference is fliegal because it injures the batsman's chances.  Q. The batter hit a short fly and the umpire called "infield fly." The batted bail hit a runner on the bases and the umpire called him out also. Was it right to call a double play on the hit?  A. No. The infield fly decision should stand, as that terminated the
