Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Bridegroom's Expenses. K. There is some personal choice in the matter, but generally speaking the bridegroom is put to very little expense for the actual wedding ceremony. His expenses come during the days and nights immediately after the wedding ceremony is over.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am keeping steady company with a young man of Chicago, reaching home the end of June.

Miss Fogg's Dance Revue Is Well Received

Character numbers in Miss Adelaide Fogg's annual dance revue at the Brandeis theater Wednesday afternoon and evening, were especially well received. Four-year-old Beverly Miller was popular as Tony the newsboy, and the episode in Central park, being a flirtation between popovers and nurse maids, and Grandma's Night Out, by Geraldine Pros, were other pleasing drama dances.

The opening scene representing spring, was an artistic arrangement of maidens and baskets and an electrically lighted Maypole. Frances Gafford in "Spring Maid" was a pretty picture in a fluttering gown of pale green and white topped with a picture-hat of white chiffon. Ruth Harrison did some clever work in Eglu Fantastique. Miss Adelaide Fogg danced two numbers, "Italian Flower Girl" and "May Time," to the apparent delight of her audience.

Alice Keogh and Billy Creighton, in Colonial costumes, danced a charming number, "Gavotte." Burnedette and Veronica Hoffman presented an attractive dance, "Two Little Girls in Blue," and Mildred Jacque and Ruth Betts did some skillful work in "Sweet Sixteen."

Other solo dancers were Virginia Hoffman, Frances Melcher, Jane Matthal, Irene Lundeen, Jaci Harde, Phyllis Smyth, Sue Harwell, Burnedette and Veronica Hoffman who presented an attractive dance, "Two Little Girls in Blue." Grace Long, Faustsen and Maxown Potts, Dorothy Goldstein, Ann Roseblatt, Ruth Betts, Velma Pierce, Doris Yeager, Miriam Aye, Clella Philpott, Esther Ellis and Lina Taylor, Ellen Peterson, Alice Sowell, Mildred Jacque, Ann Riklin, Hyances Alvord, Mary Jeanette Hoffmann, Elizabeth and Lillian Kornmayer, Ann Zadek.

Mrs. W. E. Bolin Visits Women's Clubs in Los Angeles.

Mrs. W. E. Bolin returned Saturday from Los Angeles, Cal., where she spent the winter with Mr. Bolin's mother, Mrs. W. E. Bolin, sr. She also visited Santa Barbara, San Diego and Coronado, and stopped at the Grand canyon of Arizona on her return trip.

Mrs. Bolin, who is well known here for her Red Cross and Woman's club work, attended general meetings of the Friday Morning club and the Ebel club, the two Los Angeles women's clubs. Both of them are planning club houses of their own to be built this coming year. Mrs. Bolin attended a reception of the League of Women Voters given for Maude Wood Parks, national head of the league, and sat at the speakers' table, and she also was present at the nonpartisan luncheon given every month by Miss Mary Foy of Pasadena at the Maryland.

Among her interesting experiences Mrs. Bolin ranks the Nebraska picnic, at which she said 25,000 persons claimed Nebraska as their former home. "I was present," she said, "at the picnic, which left Omaha for his Hollywood home this winter, was one of the speakers. She visited Universal City and spent one day out on location with a company which was filming wild west scenes. The beautiful estate of Edgar Rice Burroughs, author of "Tarzan of the Apes," Mrs. Bolin also met Harold Lloyd, former Nebraska boy, and watched Douglas Fairbanks, who is working on a new picture, "Robin Hood," in an old English castle and village built for the occasion near Hollywood.

My Marriage Problems

Adela Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE" (Copyright 1922)

The Strange Code Katherine Strove to Interpret.

There was a little pardonable triumph in Katherine's eyes as she replied to Lillian's discovery that she had known the language of the man in the hospital.

"Yes, I could understand them, all right," she said. "I thought perhaps I would be able to when you told me about them, but I didn't dare tell you for fear of holding out false hopes. There are so many dialects in all these tongues, you know. But I've always had a sort of knack at languages, and in the hospitals over there I was able to pick up a sort of working knowledge of a number of them. So it was easy for me to understand these chaps, except when their tones were very low. You see, I was careful to keep a little distance from them with my back turned part of the time, and pretend to be busy with several things. I thought you would want me to play safe on that score, especially if I am to go on with Joe out of the hospital."

She paused and looked inquiringly at Lillian, who nodded an emphatic assent.

"Of course," she said. "That's the vital thing, to be sure he has no suspicion of you. If I can once get you inside of the home to which I'm very sure he's to be taken I'll ask nothing else of fate for at least three-quarters of an hour. But go on."

"They went through a lot of preliminary stuff, Anton asking all about Joe's accident, and Joe describing it in detail. They were clever enough to do most of this in broken English, and were even foxy enough to explain to me that they had to talk in their own language sometimes, because Anton couldn't understand very well."

"That's because Smith wanted to over-emphasize the fact that he is alien," Lillian commented. "I imagined so." Katherine returned. "And then they got down to business in their own tongue, of course. It was queer to see how their relations changed the minute they stopped speaking what they called English. Before, they ostensibly had been equals, but in their own tongue it was plainly to be seen that Anton was in command. Joe, the very humble subordinate."

"And a very arrogant commander, Anton, or I miss my guess," Lillian interrupted.

"Exactly. In fact, if I hadn't known what a rascal Joe was I should have felt sorry for him. Anton gave him most thoroughly for daring to speak to me, and he reminded him that time was everything, and that this accident had delayed them a lot. Then he asked this question—'Did you get it?'"

Lillian sat tensely forward in her chair, and I knew that this question, obscure to me, meant much to her. Katherine's lips quickened into a little smile as she went on.

"I've heard some pretty stiff swearing in my time," she said, "with men coming out of delirium and all, but I never heard Anton's effort equalled at Joe's sullen reply to the effect that the girl—evidently, Katie—had the object, whatever it was, that Anton wished, and had promised to bring it to him on the evening he was hurt. Joe added, with some extra vicious epithets against Katie, that he knew she still had the object—they both called the thing 'it'—because she would be afraid to give it to any one but himself."

"When Anton finished his cursing, and he uttered it in the lowest, most silken tones possible—no one who didn't understand the language would dream he was angry—he demanded Katie's name and address, saying he would not fail as Joe had. And, honestly, girl, he made my blood run cold at the smiling way he repeated 'Graham' when Joe told him where Katie worked. He certainly has it in for your family."

The lines around Lillian's mouth seemed deeper, but she made no comment except to start with a faint trace of impatience.

"We must say home as soon as you've finished, Katherine."

"The rest of the interview was the most unintelligible stuff imaginable," Katherine said slowly. "I'm sure it was code mostly, and how I wished I had Madge there behind a screen, she could have remembered it, but all I could do was to interrupt them when they began it, take Joe's temper, and then Lillian's."

Common Sense

By J. J. MUNDT. Do You Spend Your Money Before You Get It?

Isn't it true that most of your worry comes from spending your income before you get it? You buy this article and that feeling sure that within a short time you will have the money to pay for it, and perhaps you might be able to pay if the money comes when and as you expect it.

But there are unexpected expenses, some persons fail to meet their obligations to you, and then you fail in turn to meet the debts you have incurred. The worry you have at present is just claims, and it might have been avoided if you had used better judgment in waiting till you had the money to pay before you bought.

Parents' Problems

Also you would not make so many needless expenditures if you followed the plan of having the cash before you spend.

Think it over, you who have been accustomed to buy before you have the money to pay and answer yourself whether you got enough enjoyment to repay you out of the things you went in debt for and had to worry along to pay for. Earn first—then spend, but save some. Anything else is a peace-destroying process. (Copyright, 1922.)
