

Women's Quarrel Ends When Judge Makes Them Kiss

Feud Was Started Over Alleged Remarks Concerning Children's Deformities.

Yesterday was "armistice day" in Judge George Holmes' division of municipal court, where two women entered, "madder than wet hens," and departed with kisses warm upon their lips. They kissed each other, not the judge.

The judge believes that the ends of justice and peace on earth will have been served by omitting the names of these women who occupy adjoining homes on Florence boulevard. One of the disputations twin brought an action against the other to keep the peace. The case was called for hearing and the judge quickly sensed a neighborhood row which grew from practically nothing.

Neighbors Adds Fuel.

One of the women charged that a neighbor told her that the other woman in this case said that her baby had a hair lip, and the other woman retorted by alleging that another neighbor told her that the neighbor of this peace case said her baby had large hands and a bump on its head. From those idle remarks by neighbors the disputants made faces at each other and otherwise displayed ill feeling until one brought an action in municipal court.

The judge took the women into his chambers and talked to them like an uncle.

Say Lord's Prayer.

"Do you say the Lord's prayer?" asked the judge of one of the women, who replied that she did.

"Then repeat it here," added the judge. The woman complied.

"Do you mean it?" the judge asked.

The woman hung her head.

"Now, I want you women to kiss each other right here, forget all that has happened, and resolve to live amicably hereafter," the judge continued.

The women kissed each other and went their way, whereupon the judge called the next case.
