

Some Striking "Stills" from Filmland

He exerts a mean mien when he captivates the ladies in "Foolish Wives," gigantic film spectacle. In real life he is Count Erich von Stroheim.

Here is the personification of "My Wild Irish Rose," portrayed by pretty Pauline Starke, a coming cinema luminary.

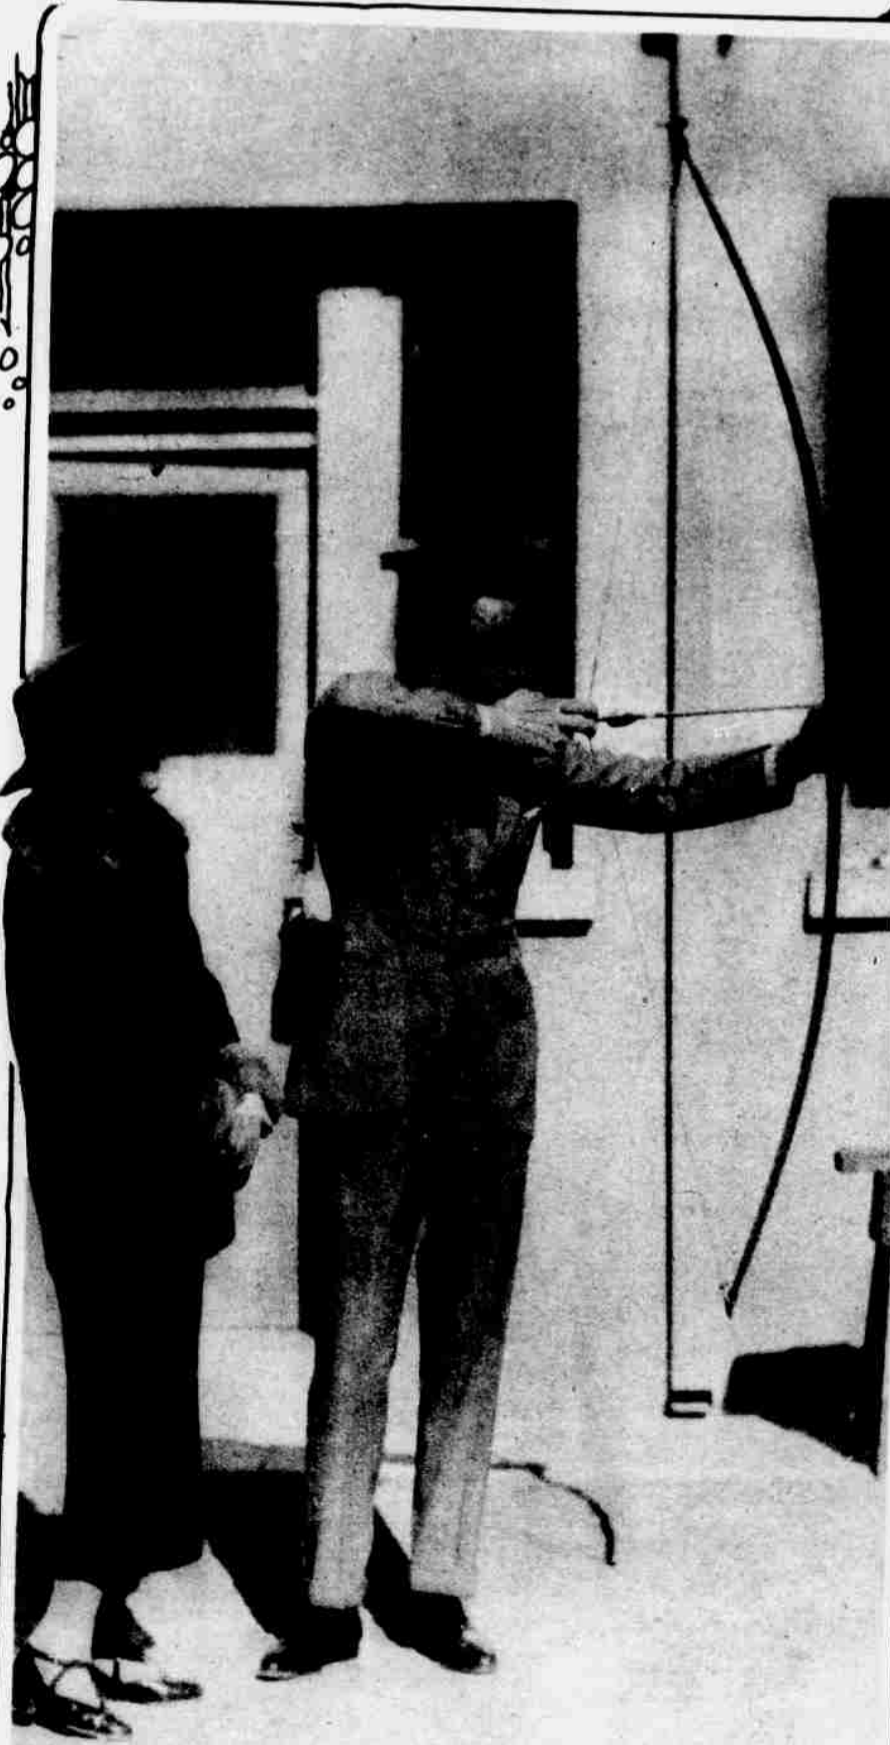

Hoodathunkut? 'Tis Charles Chaplin, the comedy king, on one of his off days.

Bobbing up from the fur piece is Mae Busch, a typical snugly-dumpling. Mae plays a leading role in "Foolish Wives."

"Big Bill" Farnum is welcomed back to the screen by his little daughter. "Bill's" happiest moments, he says, are spent with the little girl, telling her fairy tales.

Mary and Doug try other stunts besides cavorting before the movie lens. Here they are seen practicing as archers.

We don't know whether Buster Keaton has just imbibed some TNT or is trying to imitate "The Thinker," but word comes that the scene shows him resting after a chase from cops—in films, of course.

Corinne Griffith, a favorite of many movie fans, is coming into her own, as shown in her latest starring vehicle. "Island Wives."