State Takes Hand in Radio Reports

Bureau of Markets Sends Blanks to Amateurs to Jot Down Market Reports.

By The Associated Press.
Lincoln, May 16.—Blank forms to facilitate the receiving of market reports sent out to amateur radio and wireless receivers in Nebraska and adjoining states by the State Bureau of Markets through the sending stations at the University of Nebraska, Nebraska Wesleyan and a local private set, are being mailed out to more than 400 amateur receivers by the Department of Agriculture. Three forms are included, one for each variety of market sent by the three stations.

The markets are furnished by the bureau from its federal leased wire operating in the state house, connected with all the large market centers of the country. The early radio report sent by the university starts at 10 a. m. and closes at 10:10. This set has a wave length of 375 meters and carries all the early live stock and grain quotations, together with the weather report.

Live Stock Market.
The noon report, dispatched by a local sending station, covers a period from 12:20 to 12:30 p. m., and has a wave length of 200 meters. It carries the closing live stock and produce market, together with late weather.

The afternoon report sent from Wesleyan operates 15 minutes from 4 to 4:15 p. m. The Wesleyan set has a length of 375 meters and carries the closing grain and live stock markets. Forms for the three reports are designated by number.

Markets available in the early report are: Kansas City hogs, sheep; previous day's grain reports from Chicago and Kansas City. The second report carries Omaha hogs, cattle and sheep; Kansas City, hogs, cattle and sheep, and Chicago and New York butter and eggs. The closing report has Omaha hogs, cattle and sheep; Kansas City hogs, cattle and sheep, and Chicago and Kansas City close grains.

The bureau is considering the addition of the St. Joseph live stock and the Omaha and Kansas City grain reports.

SPARKS

Herbert Negele of the Harry Koch company has installed a Marken two-stage amplifying set in his home.

The Bee's radio concert from the stage of the Brandeis theater will start at 8:15 tonight. Microphones have been installed by Ray Rainbolt of the Omaha Grain exchange broadcasting station, WAAW, to transmit the entertainment.

Here are the call letters of five more broadcasting stations:
Call Location
KFC, Seattle, Wash.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.
KPL, Grindley, Cal.—Precision Shop.
KOB, San Francisco—E. J. Loden.
KOC, Hollywood, Cal.—Electric Lighting company.
KOP, Pomona, Cal.—Pomona Fixture and Wiring company.

Other radio broadcasting stations will be listed in the radio columns of The Bee tomorrow.

QUESTIONS

F. T. H., Plattsmouth, Neb.
Q—What is the best wire to use for a crystal set?
A—The same as an aerial.

J. J. G., Chadron, Neb.
Q—What is the range of an average crystal set?
A—Crystal sets are not to be depended upon for more than 100 miles. Signals have been heard, however, a greater distance on crystal sets, but it is the exception and not the rule. For greater distance, use a vacuum tube regenerative circuit.

G. F. D., Carroll, Ia.
Q—Will a gas pipe do for a ground?
A—If you are sure the gas pipe has not an insulated lining in the line somewhere, a water pipe would make a much better ground.

Live Stock Traders Name Delegates to Convention

At a meeting of the local Live Stock Traders' exchange Monday at the stock yards the following delegates were elected to attend the seventh annual meeting of the National Live Stock Traders' exchange which meets at Sioux City, Ia., June 9 and 10: James H. Bulla, Anthony Monahan, Frank G. Kellogg, James B. Root, Byron G. Smiley, James W. Murphy and Samuel Wertheimer. The national organization was formed seven years ago and E. P. Riley is president and W. S. Vail, secretary, both being residents of Sioux City.

An elaborate program of business and entertainment has been prepared by the people of Sioux City and addresses will be made by representatives of the live stock industry of national prominence. Accompanying the delegates representing the local market will be a large number of Omahans who will, it is expected, demonstrate the importance of Omaha as a live stock center.

The Dancing Master

By RUBY M. AYRES.

The whole world seemed blotted out in a single flash, leaving only herself and him. Although she was not aware of it, her arms fell limply to her sides and she stood, all her dainty assurance gone, staring at him with tragic eyes.

He looked so ill, so ill! Her heart seemed to die with passionate love and pity.

A little uncertain murmur swept through the room. Was it all part of the show? People asked each other. The music played more loudly; Mme. Senestis tried to push her way to the front. She called Elizabeth's name urgently, but the girl did not hear.

All she saw was Royston's worn face; all she knew was that she must go to him—that nobody else in the world mattered.

She made a quick little step toward him, then stopped, shuddered and looked round as if she had been roughly awakened from sleep to find herself in a strange room, full of unknown faces.

In an instant the months of her training were wiped out and forgotten; it was as if some one had taken her straight from her uncle's house at Dilbury, dressed her in this fine frock and set her down in this great room to dance when she had never been taught a step.

She looked wildly around the room, terrified! Then somebody laughed, a cruel, sneering laugh, and Elizabeth screamed, flinging up her hands to her eyes. Her nerves had stammered with one cruel rush; she knew that she had failed, felt that she would go mad. And as Mme. Senestis broke through the stupefied crowd to reach her Elizabeth turned and fled away.

Everything that followed was a nightmare of unreality and it was only long afterward, looking back on it, that Elizabeth was able to piece it together, like bits of broken glass.

She knew that many amused glances followed her as she fled away from the crowded room. She heard one or two sneering remarks and met her aunt's triumphant stare before she was safely back in the little room, shuddering from head to foot in a panic of shame and fear.

Elizabeth hardly heard what she said. It did not seem to matter, and it was only when Madame lost her self-control sufficiently to raise a hand as if to strike her that the girl fell back shuddering and moaning.

"No—no! Oh, please—please—don't hurt me!"

Neil Farmer came into the room at that moment. He caught Madame's uplifted arm and held it in a hard grip. His face was white and his eyes compassionate as they rested on Elizabeth.

"For God's sake leave her alone!" he said harshly. "Do you think you're doing any good by this scene?"

He almost flung Madame aside and went to Elizabeth. He put an arm gently around her—he spoke to her soothingly.

"It's all right; there's nothing to fear. I'll take you away; I'll take you home, Elizabeth."

She raised desperate eyes to his face.

"I've failed, I've failed," she said wildly. It was her one thought now—a terrified thought, since she had read the fury and hatred in the eyes of Mme. Senestis. What was to become of her? To whom could she go?

Madame broke out again. "You fail! I never forgive. Come not to me again. Little fool, you are! You ruin me; my name gone forever! Not for all the money in this world I ever try you again! Mon Dieu! Mon Dieu!" and she broke into a flood of hysterical tears.

Farmer turned on her savagely. "Do you think it's worse for you than it is for Elizabeth?" he demanded. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself!"

Madame looked up at him, the tears streaming down her face, her eyes vixenish. "And you, you lose your money! Come; you lost all," she reminded him.

Farmer laughed recklessly. "You don't think I care, do you?" he asked roughly; he put his arm round Elizabeth and led her out of the room.

He sent for his car and took her home; he hardly spoke to her on the way, and she sat back, with closed eyes, her hand in his.

It was only when they were again in the dancing studio, which had been the scene of so much work and hope, that Elizabeth seemed to realize what had really happened, and there was despair in her eyes as she hid them with shaking hands.

"Oh, what shall I do? What shall I do? What will become of me?" she sobbed.

He drew her hands down, holding them fast.

"I am here," he said. "Be my wife, Elizabeth. What has happened makes no difference. If you had succeeded you would have seemed further than ever from me, but now—

He would have drawn her into his arms, but she resisted.

She did not want him; her heart and soul cried out for Royston; to be with him, to feel his arms around her, to be comforted by him.

It was through him she had failed, she knew. The shock of meeting his eyes across the room when she had believed him far enough away and dangerously ill had spelled failure for her; she was not strong enough to carve a way through life without him; her weakness told her that there could be no success for her without his love.

Pawnee Woman Hurt in Smashup of Autos

Pawnee, Neb., May 16.—(Special Telegram.)—Mrs. W. S. Losey of this city was seriously injured in an auto accident just east of here Sunday evening when the roadster in which she was riding was hit by a big racing car. She was with her daughter, Thelma, and granddaughter, Emmagene Mick, and was crossing the state highway at right angles when the big car approached. The engine of her car died in the middle of the road and the big car struck broadside. Her head was deeply gashed. She was taken to the Pawnee hospital for treatment. The other occupants were unhurt. Both cars were from Humboldt, Neb. The car in which Mrs. Losey rode belonged to a friend who was visiting the family.
