A Hundred People Hear Sunday Art Talk

One hundred people attended the Sunday gallery talk given by Robert S. Gilder in the Omaha Society of Fine Arts rooms at the library, where the Gilder pictures are now being shown. Mr. Gilder talked from his paintings, telling what his purpose was in each case. One picture he painted to show a certain rock of unusual color. Other pictures were painted for cloud effects, others to show glaring sunlight, etc.

Three places of especial interest, painted by Dr. Gilder and mentioned yesterday, were: Harold Bell Wright's home in the desert country, ranch owned by the father of Mrs. William Jennings Bryan, jr., formerly Mr. Berger of Lincoln; and a place owned by a sister of Mrs. R. Beecher Howell.

Among those seen at the Sunday gallery talk were: Mrs. Ward Burgess, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wyman, Mrs. Myron Learned, Miss Lydia Wilson, Matthew A. Hall and Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Tibbles. Perhaps there were no more interested spectators and listeners than Mr. and Mrs. Tibbles. Mr. Tibbles was the husband of the Omaha Indian maiden, Bright Eyes, who died in 1903. Bright Eyes was born at Bellevue in 1854 and was Indian, French and American. She toured the east at one time with her husband and Standing Bear, speaking to great audiences. She also wrote considerably, as did her husband, Mr. Tibbles. Mr. Tibbles goes out seldom now, but he is a faithful attendant at art exhibits and was keenly interested in Dr. Gilder's Sunday talk.

Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Shall She Give Him Up? Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 18, engaged to a man of 27. My parents were not in favor of the match. Recently we were visiting relatives in my family. These people made some rude remarks to my parents regarding my friend that he looked old and not good-looking, etc.

I was almost tempted to break my engagement. Now, Miss Fairfax, I have been going about with this man two years. We never had the least bit of a quarrel. He loves me very much, as before we were engaged he had a good deal of trouble, as my parents objected, but he never gave up. Will you please advise me what to do? WORRIED.

You aren't marrying to please your relatives. If your people have good reason to disapprove of your marriage, it might be wise for 18 to listen to the judgment and wisdom of age. But once your parents have agreed to let you marry the man you love, and once you have decided that he is indeed the man with whom you wish to spend the rest of your life, don't be so weak as to yield to every wind that comes along. It is impossible to please every one. It is you who must choose—but not without due regard for the mother and father who have your real interests at heart.

Free to Make Friends. Dear Miss Fairfax: Some months ago an intimate friend and myself met two young ladies. My friend went out with one and I with the other, always together. After going five months with this young lady, I left her. I always regretted not having taken my friend's sweetheart at the beginning, as I cared more for her. My friend, meanwhile, still was going out with his sweetheart until last week, when they, too, separated. I did not think of this lady my friend had been going out with until last week I met her, and we had a heart-to-heart talk. This girl cared for me, and I reciprocated, but we did not know what to do. I would therefore ask you to advise us. M. B.

There is no question of "betraying" your friends. After all, you and your sweetheart separated long ago. And the other girl and your friend quarreled, without any cause or offense on your part. So, now, why shouldn't you be free to make friends with this girl who attracts you?

Birthday Gifts. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am a girl 18 years of age, engaged to a young man. We have kept company for nearly a year. Now, what I want to ask you is this: "What shall I give him for his birthday?" which is soon.

Shall I give him my picture, without him asking for it? Or would some piece of jewelry be proper? I would not care to spend more than $4 or $5. BLUE EYES.

Since you are engaged, I think your photograph, perhaps in a pretty frame, would be an acceptable gift. If you know of something in jewelry which he would like to have, I think it proper for you to make him such a gift under the circumstances.

Mrs. V. A. B.: I did not keep the address of the Grand Island woman who has an auto knitter. If she sees this and will send me her address I will give it to you through these columns. I could locate it through back files if I had an approximate date, without which hours of searching might be required to find it.

The wedding will have a romantic feature, for one-half hour before his own wedding Mr. Lytle will read the marriage ceremony for an old friend and classmate, Charles A. Wing, who is minister of First Unitarian church in Springfield, Mass. And the other girl and your friend quarreled, without any cause or offense on your part. So, now, why shouldn't you be free to make friends with this girl who attracts you?

How to Improve Your Porch Furniture

By JEAN TRUE.

Miss True! Please tell me how I can improve my porch furniture. It is wicker and was natural when new. It is now soiled and rather dark. I should like to see it up for the summer and add a new rug to it. Please help me with ideas or suggestions.

You are in luck if you own some wicker porch pieces. There is nothing better than wicker for porches these days.

The first thing to be done is to clean your furniture thoroughly. There are different ways of doing this work. You can blow the dust out of the crevices with a pair of bellows, an auto foot pump or a radiator brush. Make a soap solution of one cake of white soap, one gallon of water, one half cupful of common salt. Scrub thoroughly, using plenty of water; place in a shady place to dry. This washing will make the wicker firm and wicker by a second method. Wash it in a solution of strong soda water. Use one tablespoonful of washing soda to one quart of water. This will remove the finish.

You can now paint your wicker any color you wish. Use a good enamel paint. Put on thinly and do not allow the paint to run or settle in the openings, as it will be rough and thick. You can use two colors if you like. Paint a solid color first and when this is thoroughly dry mottle in places with a second color to produce a two-tone effect. This second coat should be put on with the end of the brush and patted gently. Do not stroke. This gives a pleasing effect if carefully done.

A burnt orange and natural to go with it would be nice for a north or east porch; one solid green or two shades of green would be nice and cool for the summer. Put on the lighter shades first and darker color in dapple as above.

When you have conquered your wicker furniture to suit your fancy, I suggest you select some good-looking awnings to add to your porch effect. You can find striped awnings to correspond with your porch furniture. Purchase roller shade awning material that is weather-proof. Now add some good-looking porch cushions and a grass rug to match and you will be ready for real summer weather.

A new "tile" for protecting the table top from hot dishes is an oval of silver in Dutch pattern. And it is surprisingly inexpensive.

My Marriage Problems

Adela Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

(Copyright 1922)

Why Madge Worried About Lillian.

Lillian laughed lightly when the door closed upon Tom Chester. "Did you see his eyes," she asked merrily, "when I told him to see Briggs at 5 in the morning?" "Yes, I saw them," I answered, a bit shortly I am afraid, for again I had felt a tingle of resentment at the amusement she apparently found in young Mr. Chester's boyish outlook upon life.

She shot a quick glance at me, swift as a rapier's flash, and as cutting, but made no other comment upon Tom Chester. I felt as if I had come too near a blazing grate fire had seared my face.

"Come to bed, sleepy-head," she chanted, and I saw that she meant to ignore my little exhibition of temper, so I girded my brain accordingly to take her cue.

"I'm glad to see that Richard is himself again," she said cryptically, and went on rapidly without giving me a chance to reply. "I can give you only a few hours' real sleep," she said, "for Tom Chester will bring Mr. Briggs straight over here—before breakfast, I imagine—and I want you with me while I talk to him. So set your alarm clock for 5."

I obeyed her injunction, and was awakened with a jerk by the shrill peeping of the clock, and lay struggling with my overpowering sleepiness for several minutes before I could overcome it and get out of bed.

"I Wish I Knew." I dashed cold water over my face and neck, held my wrists under the icy flow from the faucet, and finally was able to shake myself into wakefulness. Then I dressed and went downstairs to find Lillian alert and down, looking as bright and alert as if she had had her regular quota of sleep.

"I wish I knew how you do it," I said peevishly. "Do what?" Lillian returned absently. "Oh, you mean how I manage to look rested with four hours' sleep? My dear, it's no credit to me—it's simply because I happen to be one of those peculiarly-constituted critters to whom excitement is like strong coffee or a hypodermic of cocaine. When the thing's all over I'll be a wreck for a day or two, as you know, but until then I'll be right on my toes."

She spoke only the truth. I well knew what reaction of weakness, almost to the point of exhaustion, would be hers when she finally had worked out the problem revolving around Smith. Something else, I knew, also—something that troubled me sorely. I could see that these attacks of nervous exhaustion were more severe as the years went on, and that in an emergency like the one we were confronting she was working sorely on nervous excitement with no reserve of physical strength.

Tom Chester Arrives.

There was nothing to be done, however, except to aid her unobtrusively, and to save her strength in every way I could. But even as the thought came to me I laughed sardonically to myself at the idea of any one trying to conserve Lillian's strength, for I remember Dicky's bizarre characterization of her:

"When old Lil has her nose to the ground on any job," he once had said, "you might as well try to get his kill away from a man-eating tiger by offering him a lollipop, as to call her off."

"Well!" Lillian's tone held amusement and a touch of impatience. "It strikes me you'd better call your soul back from whatever realm it has winged itself to, and join me in a raid on the kitchen. Katie won't be up for a while, but here's no need of our going fasting until then. And, your respected mother-in-law to the contrary, you do make the best coffee I ever tasted, so hurry up and me a cup."

I flushed with pleasure at her compliment—show me a woman who will not thrill at a tribute to her coffee-making—and followed Lillian to the kitchen, working briskly with her until we sat down to an appetizing breakfast of late melons, coffee, toast, and poached eggs. But I alone discussed the breakfast. Lillian drank three cups of coffee, nibbled a piece of toast, and declared herself ready for anything.

"Let's get back to the living-room," she said. "If I don't mistake Tom Chester's energy, he'll shortly appear with the dignified Mr. Briggs in tow."

And we had scarcely reached the living-room when Tom Chester's knock sounded upon the door.

Darken Tan Shoes. If when buying brown shoes the color is too light and one hesitates to purchase on this account, it may be remedied by rubbing with a cloth dipped in ammonia, allowing the leather to dry in between whistles, and repeating the process. It secures a nice dark tan both quickly and effectively.

Advertisement for Jay Burns Baking Company. It features images of shortening products: Cotton Seed Oil, Corn Oil, Shortening Compound, and Pure Kettle Rendered Lard. The main headline reads "There's a difference in Shortening—Therefore There's a Difference in Bread". The text explains that the use of any of the shortenings shown will have little effect on the outside of a loaf of bread, but shortening has a great deal to do with the quality of bread, as well as with its color and texture—and price. It promotes BETSY ROSS Bread as secondary, first comes the desire to produce a light, appetizing loaf of highest food value. In ordinary bread a cheaper shortening must be made to "do." The slightly increased cost of this shortening will be recognized and appreciated by those who demand bread of high quality. The Jay Burns Baking Company logo is at the bottom.
