Problems That Perplex

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Battling for Happines. Dear Miss Fairfax: I, like many others, wish to obtain some advice, so thought I would write to you.

My trouble seems quite serious.

It is this: I am a girl 19 years old lives me when I tell him I cannot help it if he stays around.

The dinner dance season will be held stead of Saturday. My trouble seems quite serious. It is this: I am a girl 19 years old and have a very dear friend at few the my junior. I think a great deal of him, as he is a real nice boy, and I know he thinks more of me than of any other girl, as he shows me every consideration. Now, Miss Fairfax, there is another man, 42 years old, that comes te our place every other week, and he just sits around here trying to draw my attention in every way. Now, I am a girl that does not like to hurt anybody's feelings, so I talk and try to be sociable, but things seem to be getting worse. He just comes and hangs around so silly after me—pulls his chair up to me and sits facing me—and it makes me sick. He is a real good singer, so he sits and sings love songs, then turns to me and says "Gladys, how's that?" Now, this man is rich and has lots of land, but I just hate the und he walks on.

While my flance is not wealthy, although they own their own place, I am afraid he will get sore if this old fellow hangs around much longer. I told my finace all about it, and once when he was here I inwited my friend in, so we sat side by side and talked, and then went for a ride, but still he cannot take the hint, so please tell me how I can get rid of him, as my father teases me, because this 42-year-old man is me, because this 42-year-old man is me, because the second have it lets please.

Anxiously awaiting an early answer, Yours sincerely, GLADYS. P. S.—This is every word the truth, so please consider it serious. G. Well, Gladys, I'm for you. Of court house, Friday at 2 p. m. The course, I don't regard 42 as "old age," but most 19-year-olds like yourself do. At any rate, if you don't like this man, why should you encourage him? I am glad you are polite and considerate. You should be that, but at the same time you should be fair to yourself, and I think you have about reached the place where you should let this older man know where you stand. Your father does very wrong to tease you. You feel intensely in this matter and I don't wonder that you do.

You are battling for your happiness.
Your father evidently doesn't realize this. I think you are justified in taking any sane, reasonable steps necessary to let this man and your family understand that you do not care for him. Don't rush into the arms of this younger man. Keep your head, and be sure he is the one you can care for seriously before you commit yourself. If you are engaged to the young man and really mean to marry him then I think wealthy so I could have it lots nicer if I would choose him. Then I told my father I would sooner die than to marry for wealth, because love is my aim in life, and I'll die an old maid if I cannot marry for love.

Please give advice, as I am deeply by you and not encourage the older man to come to the house. Appeal earnestly to your parents. It really is up to them to handle the situation. Write me again if things don't get better, for I feel an injustice is being done you and want to help if ting out of bed."

"I fancy he will take a good deal of time this morning," Lillian said, with a grim little smile, "and we expect him to ask you which is the best physican, or which doctor you employ. If you can do us the great favor of saying Dr. Pettit, so as to insure that physican's attendance upon Smith, you will be doing us a great service.
