

Mystery Domestic Is Awarded Trunk

Girl Whose Baggage Was Held for Alleged Debt Wins in Court.

Investigators of the Nebraska Humane society and the board of public welfare were unable yesterday to obtain information that would identify Victoria Gordon, who appeared before Judge R. W. Patrick of municipal court as plaintiff in a replevin action against Mrs. G. T. Ward, 310 North Forty-first street.

The court awarded Miss Gordon her trunk, on the grounds that Mrs. Ward could not legally hold personal articles to satisfy a debt. Before bringing the replevin action, Miss Gordon went to the Humane society, welfare board and other organizations for aid.

Mrs. Ward, testifying before Judge Patrick, stated that she met Miss Gordon in San Antonio, Tex., paid half of the fare for the young woman to Omaha, and received her into the Ward home on the agreement of paying her $5 a week for work she was to do. Miss Gordon was to "work out" the money advanced for fare to Omaha. After several weeks of refusal to help with the housework, according to Mrs. Ward, there was a misunderstanding about a cape, whereupon Miss Gordon left. Miss Gordon is now living at the home of J. I. Tammosian, 4912 Chicago street.

Whereabouts of Indicted Omaha Man Still Unknown

Thomas Nolan, attorney for Thomas M. Finney, said yesterday he had not heard anything of the whereabouts of his client who disappeared from Omaha after he was indicted by a federal grand jury a few weeks ago, with 24 others, on charges of conspiracy to use the mails to defraud in the affairs of the Pioneer State bank, Colonial Timber and Coal corporation and other institutions.

Finney's bond was placed at only $1,000, but federal officers have not been able to find him. He was reported to have gone to Los Angeles, where his wife is living.

Concord Club Asked to Aid Willard Hall Campaign

David Cole, talking to the Concord club at luncheon yesterday in the palm room at the Hotel Fontenelle, asked for the club's co-operation in the Willard Hall campaign.

Judge Robert Patrick, in a short talk on "Concord," told what the club meant to the city, and said its spirit was invaluable to Omaha.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES THE TALE OF SNOWBALL LAMB BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

CHAPTER XII. The Accident.

Snowball was quick to learn one thing. He soon found that jumping through Johnnie Green's paper-covered hoops brought him plenty of cracked corn.

No longer did Snowball run away from his young master when Johnnie entered the pasture and called to him. Nothing that the rascally black lamb said could persuade Snowball to lead Johnnie Green a chase.

Much to the black lamb's disgust Snowball would start for the bars the moment Johnnie appeared there. "Johnnie wants to give me a treat!" Snowball would exclaim. "There's cracked corn waiting for me!" And off he would go.

Strange as it may seem, Johnnie tired of the circus tricks before Snowball did. It wasn't long before several days would go by without Johnnie once holding up a hoop for Snowball to jump through. And often Snowball would moon about the farmyard wishing that Johnnie would do that very thing. "I hope the cracked corn isn't getting low," said Snowball to himself. And he cried "Ba-a-a-a!" But Johnnie Green paid no heed to him. Though Johnnie was at that very moment in the swing, he never once looked at Snowball as he roamed mournfully about.

So Snowball crossed the road and strolled up the steep bank opposite the farmhouse. And having nothing better to do, he was about to stroll down again when he spied something that made him stop short. Was that a paper-covered hoop that he saw, right there at the top of the bank? He wondered. It was round. And it was certainly covered with something that looked like paper.

For a moment Snowball thought he would walk around the hoop—if it was one—and examine it. He couldn't see anybody holding it up on edge. But there it was, just waiting for somebody to come along and jump through it!

"It's a hoop," Snowball muttered to himself. "There's no doubt about that." And lowering his head he ran at the hoop—and jumped.

There was a splitting sound and a crash both at the same time. Instead of bursting through a thin paper shell and clearing the hoop neatly, Snowball found himself wedged inside something. Though he didn't know it, he had butted the end of a barrel, knocking in its head and plunging headlong inside it.

Meanwhile Johnnie Green had stopped swinging. He looked across the road just in time to see the barrel totter on the edge of the steep bank. Not only totter, but begin to roll down hill!

Out of the barrel stuck two woolly legs, kicking frantically.

"What in the world—" Johnnie Green exclaimed. He leaped from the swing and ran towards the strange sight. But he was too late to help.

The barrel fast gathered headway. It crossed the road like some live thing, to bring up against the farmhouse with a terrific smash.

Instantly the barrel fell into a dozen pieces as its staves caved in. And out of the wreck rose Snowball. He gave one frightened bleat. And then he tore off towards the pasture as fast as he could run. He didn't even wait to see if Johnnie Green would give him a treat of cracked corn.

As he ran he said to himself, "There may have been a tiger inside that thing. . . I don't know! . . . I wouldn't join the circus for all the cracked corn in the world!"

Removal of a two-story brick veneer house owned by John R. Ringwalt at Forty-first and Davenport streets was necessary for completion of the Second Church of Christ, Scientist. The building and part of the foundation are on skids and will be moved this week.

Work on the completion of the church building will not begin until next year, according to James A. Brown, chairman of the building committee. Original plans for the auditorium called for a seating capacity of 600, but these have been changed to accommodate 1,200 persons.
