

Masons Convene for 65th Annual Communication

Over 400 Representatives of Nebraska Lodges Expected to Attend Session in Omaha.

The largest grand lodge session in the history of Nebraska Masons convened at Masonic temple, Nineteenth and Douglas, yesterday morning for the 65th annual communication.

Grand Secretary Francis E. White estimates that over 400 representatives from Nebraska lodges will be present at the meetings, which continue through Thursday.

One hundred and seventy-five masters-elect received the past master's degree at a special session Monday evening. A regular school of instruction also was held Monday morning by assistants to the grand custodian. In the afternoon George W. Linniger lodge No. 268, Omaha, exemplified the conferring of the master mason degree on an actual candidate.

Yesterday's program consisted of the opening of the grand lodge by Deputy Grand Master Edward M. Wellman, a reception of all past grand masters and the reception of the present grand master, Lewis E. Smith.

An address of welcome, the address of Grand Master Smith and reports of the grand officers concluded the morning program.

At 12:30 the dinner of the Nebraska Veteran Freemasons association was held. The afternoon and evening were given to business sessions.

Business meetings will occupy all day today and Thursday morning. Installation of the grand officers will be held Thursday afternoon.

Labor Denies Bigelow Dictates Its Politics

Lincoln, June 6.—(Special Telegram.)—Have local federation of labor post No. 1, in resolutions adopted denies the right of Ansour H. Bigelow, Omaha, and Frank Coffey, Lincoln, to speak for labor and say labor is opposed to the Wray-Norton combination for United States senator and governor respectively.

The resolutions assert that this is the only practical combination to win at the polls and condemn alleged derogatory statements relative to the character of Arthur G. Wray.

Continuing, the resolutions assert that if the fight on Wray and Norton is continued in the third party ranks political control of state machinery will be vested in the hands of one of the old parties.

Expert at Bakers' Meeting Shows Cooking Methods

An expert baker, giving demonstrations of the best way to make the best things to eat, is a special feature of the annual meeting of the Nebraska Bakers association at Hotel Castle. More than 150 master bakers from Nebraska, Iowa and neighboring states are present.

Sam T. Geiz is giving his short course in baking under auspices of the American Retail Bakers association. The short course and convention follow a three weeks' period of training, at which 42 embryo bakers were present.

The convention will continue until Thursday evening, ending with an outing at Krug park.

Graham Declares Wife Hid Illness Before Wedding

Howard B. Graham, president of the Graham Ice Cream company, in an answer filed yesterday to his wife's suit for divorce, alleges that she was in ill health when he married her, but that she concealed this fact from him. He spent thousands of dollars trying to cure her, he says. He asks that she be allowed not more than $100 a month and that he be given custody of their son.

Mayor Talks at Convention.

An address by Mayor Dahlman marked the ninth annual convention of the Retail Harness Dealers Association of Nebraska at the opening meeting Tuesday afternoon at Hotel Rome. David Larson, commissioner of the Omaha Chamber of Commerce, also spoke. A banquet, at which John H. Gamble, vice president of the First National bank, was scheduled to talk, was held last night.

Funeral Directors Meet.

The opening session of the 37th annual convention of the Nebraska Funeral Directors' association was called to order yesterday morning by President E. D. Lundak, of Pierce, in the Auditorium. The convention is combined with an exhibit of motor hearses, ambulances, caskets and all kinds of funeral supplies.

Union High to Go on

Parents in school districts Nos. 1 and 5 of Sarpy county defeated a measure to abandon the Union High school in Bellevue at a meeting Monday night. About 250 were present.

WHO'S WHO IN THE STORY.

Violent English girl, a pretty but poorly dressed English girl, is walking along a London street in the rain when her shabby little hat is blown off and quickly trodden upon by a well-dressed and unsmiling young man. The latter picks up the ruined hat and smilingly holds it to her. She looks at him and smilingly says to him: "I am so sorry about your hat."

She thought of the sturdy little boy who had stood so patiently clinging to the woman's skirts, sucking a thumb, and crying the crowd so solemnly. Oh, it could not, could not be he!

She forced her way through the crowd. In the center lying in the wet road, half-supported by the strong arm of a kindly policeman, lay the white-faced flower seller.

The tray of violets was strewn all around her. Down her glassy face ran a slow stream of blood. Her lips were parted, her breath came in gasps.

The green-painted car had come to a standstill just behind her. The chauffeur was leaning forward from the wheel. He looked pale and agitated. A tall man in evening dress, wearing an eyeglass and a flower in his coat, pushed his way past, and stooped over the fallen woman.

"Is she much hurt, constable?" he asked. His voice was deeply concerned. The fair-haired girl looked at him mechanically. It was the man who had trodden on her hat, and afterwards offered her money.

The child was crouched on the ground by the side of the injured woman sobbing with fright. "Mum—Mum—Mum!" he sobbed. He pulled at her torn dress with tiny fingers.

The woman opened her eyes—she made a feeble effort to draw him to her, but failed. The tall man stooping above her leaned nearer—perhaps she saw the kindly concern in his eyes—she made him a breathless appeal.

"Take care of him—oh, take care—of—her voice trailed away into eternal silence.

The constable rose to his feet, pressing back the crowd. The tall owner of the green car stood looking down at the dead woman with dazed eyes.

For a moment the child was forgotten.

The girl with the fair hair crept nearer to him. Timidly she put her hand out and touched him. He looked around pitiously.

"Mum—Mum—"

The girl caught him up in her arms and held him fiercely to her.

The long line outside the theater had begun to move in. People were scattering to their business. After all, there was nothing particularly interesting in a dead flower girl. It was her own fault for running in front of the motor.

The girl with the fair hair stood for a moment looking around her. Nobody seemed to have noticed that she had picked up the child. Suddenly she turned and ran across the street, holding the boy in her arms.

He clung to her neck with tiny hands, his wet cheeks pressed to hers. . . . She ran on, on, on. She seemed to gain strength from the contact of his little body. She never stopped until they reached a quiet street some distance from the theater.

Then she paused and looked around her, but there was nobody in sight. She kissed the soft cheek against her own passionately and walked on.

Presently they came again to a busy thoroughfare. The girl hailed a bus and climbed inside, the boy in her lap. His head nodded drowsily against her. She took off his ugly hat, smoothed his brown curls, and pillowed his cheek comfortably.

When they left the bus she still carried him. They were in a poor neighborhood now, with rows of ugly, uninteresting looking houses on either side. The girl stopped at one, a house with a flight of stone steps up to the front door, and a glaring gas jet in the fanlight which showed the figures of a painted number 13.

She felt in her pocket for a key, opened the door and entered softly. A short, stout woman with one eye met her in the narrow hall. She carried an armful of washing.

"I didn't expect you 'ome so soon," she said tartly, seeing the girl, "I 'ope you've brought some money."

"No." The girl came forward. The woman caught sight of the child in her arms. Her one eye grew wide with amazement.

"Well, I never. 'O'st' and where on 'earth did 'e come from?"

The girl laughed. She stooped and kissed the flushed face of the sleeping boy.

"Out of the nowhere," she said tremulously. "Out of the nowhere

—that's where he came from, Mrs. Higgs.

Mrs. Higgs kept a lodging house at No. 13, in the quiet, dreary, suburban street, where all the houses looked alike.

The prices of the rooms varied according to the degree of comfort and cleanliness, and the house was nearly always filled with floatsam and jettam of life; derelict men and women who had no homes and no money.

Mrs. Higgs never asked for a reference. Possibly she knew that if she got them they would be worthless. She took a week's rent in advance and shut her one eye to the various drawbacks her lodgers invariably possessed.

thought impressed on the child had been, "Make every effort you can, first, and then ask the Lord to help you. If you are in earnest, maybe He will let me help you in answer to your prayers."

Children should be taught to use their own gray matter.

Not all children have it so easy as the cue mentioned.

It is perfectly logical to a child to take all it can easily, but if it wants a thing hard enough, it will work for it, and that is the spirit to cultivate.

Omaha Capitalist Must Pay $18,000 for Oil Firm Stock

Paul Horbach, Omaha capitalist, must pay $18,000 more on a block of stock he purchased in the Oklahoma Gas and Clarence Oil companies, according to a verdict directed by Federal Judge Woodrough yesterday.

Horbach, with several others, bought the stock in the halcyon oil days immediately after the war, executing a contract. He refused to make the last payment of $15,760, charging fraud in the sale of the stock. The remainder represents interest on the amount due. Attorneys
