Wichita Woman Says Neighbors Thought She Would Never Get About Again, But Tanlac Made Her Feel 20 Years Younger.

"None of my neighbors thought I would ever be up and about again, but since taking Tanlac I have actually laid aside my crutches and feel as good as I did 20 years ago," declares Mrs. Flora Wilcox, 1902 W. Douglas street, Wichita, Kan.

"I suffered from rheumatism 20 years and it was all I could do to go about on crutches much less do any housework. I had such awful pains in my arms that I couldn't even raise my hand to my head. I couldn't eat anything without having a burning and intense pain in my stomach, and gas pressed around my heart, causing such palpitation I could scarcely breathe.

"Eight bottles of Tanlac gave me a fine appetite. I am never bothered with gas or palpitation, the rheumatism is gone and I can do my housework with perfect ease. I prize Tanlac more than I can express."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

Mrs. Sherman Helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lake, Michigan.—"About one year ago I suffered with irregularities and a weakness and at times was obliged to stay off my feet. I consulted with our family physician and he finally said he could not understand my case, so I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After I had taken the first bottle I could see that I was getting better. I took several bottles of the Vegetable Compound and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and I am entirely cured of my ailments. You may publish this letter if you wish."

Mrs. M. SHERMAN, Boston, Lake, Mich.

There is one fact women should consider and that is this: Women suffer from irregularities and various forms of weakness. They try this and that doctor, as well as different medicines. Finally they take Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound, and Mrs. Sherman's experience is simply another case showing its merit.

If your family physician fails to help you and the same old troubles persist, why isn't it reasonable to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound?

Artist Paints Her Sculptor Husband

Mrs. Bush-Brown

Margaret Lesley Bush-Brown, portrait painter of note, has been spending the week in Omaha. She was honor guest at an informal tea given by Mrs. A. F. Jonas Monday afternoon when the portrait reproduced above of the artist's husband, Henry K. Bush-Brown was on exhibition. The portrait is now being exhibited at Milton Darling's gallery.

Mrs. Bush-Brown is on her way from her home in Washington, D. C., to Ponca-City, Okla., where she is going to paint a portrait. Her family is remarkable for its artistic talent in varied lines. Mr. Bush-Brown is a sculptor of great ability and is president of the Washington Arts club. His bust of Lincoln stands in the Gettysburg cemetery, and among his prominent works are equestrian statues of Anthony Wayne at Valley Forge and Gen. G. Meade. Their daughter, Lydia Bush-Brown, has had a studio of her own in New York City for several years, and has chosen a different medium from either of her parents—textiles, in which she has developed batique work to its highest possible decorative value. Of the two sons in the family, one is an architect and the other a landscape architect.

Last March the Bush-Browns gave a joint exhibition of their work at the Arts club in Washington, and the collection of paintings, sculpture and textiles was the subject of an enthusiastic article in the April number of "Art and Architecture."

Mrs. Bush-Brown herself is a charming and unassuming person who would much rather talk about her husband and her daughter than her own achievements. Among her own paintings her favorite is a striking picture of Ellen Day Hale, daughter of Edward Everett Hale, which was presented to the national gallery by Miss Hale's brother, for whom Mrs. Bush-Brown painted it.

Miss Hale is also an artist and a personal friend of Mrs. Bush-Brown. It is of interest that Lincoln has been a subject both of herself and her husband. Some years ago Mrs. Bush-Brown painted a picture of Robert E. Lee, which was hung in the Robert E. Lee hall in Blue Ridge, N. C. Five years later she received a commission from Blue Ridge to paint, as a companion piece, Lincoln's portrait, which now hangs at the opposite end of the hall, the only other picture in the building.

A Philadelphia by birth, Mrs. Bush-Brown has studied at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and for three years at the Julian academy in Paris under Lefevre and Boulanger. Both she and her husband are interested in the project of teaching plastic arts to the ex-soldiers at the Mt. Weather institute in Washington, a rehabilitation movement.

My Marriage Problems

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

(Copyright 1922)

The Hint of the Menace Madge's Father Disclosed. "Step carefully," Lillian admonished in a whisper as we neared the little jog in the old corridor behind which lay the library door. "Let me guide you."

She grasped me firmly by the arm and stopped me just before we reached the door. "Lift each foot before you set it down as if you were stepping over an obstruction about a foot high and six inches wide," she directed. "There, that's it. All right, Allen," as Mr. Drake noiselessly swung open the library door. "We're here, and the mine is laid. Now we'll get down to business, and wait until our little submarine strikes it."

Allen Drake and my father were standing with grave faces just inside the door of the library. In my father's hand was a book, one of a cherished set of his favorite essays which had been privately bound for him. He evidently had just finished turning the leaves, and his voice was grave, as he looked toward me and spoke pityingly.

"There can be no mistake, daughter. I fastened a memorandum carefully between these two pages, so that only design, not carelessness, could remove it—there was a significant pause—had been directed just where to look."

"I Had Forgotten." I felt suddenly chilly, as if some evil, not fully known, were threatening me. I knew Katie's monkey-like curiosity, but I would have staked my life upon her not being so unscrupulous as to pry into my private affairs. But the three faces around me were stern and set.

Indeed, I fancied that there was a look of something very akin to horror in both Lillian's face and that of Allen Drake, as they gazed at my father, an inscrutable face that I feared something vague, terrifying, of unusual importance, was attached to this memorandum.

"Chief," Allen Drake began hesitantly, "pardon me if I'm wrong, but it seems to me that the thing we were talking about—"

"Yes, my boy," my father replied gravely. "It did concern that. Indeed—"

He stopped as he saw my puzzled, stricken face, and came toward me, slipping his arm around me.

"I had forgotten, daughter," he said, "that all this must be Greek to you, and partly to Mrs. Underwood also, although I think she knows something about what I've been trying to do. But I shall not keep you in ignorance longer, although I have not yet completed the thing on which I have been working."

What Madge Feared. He drew me to a chair near the fire and motioned the other to seats, and I held my breath as one upon the brink of a tremendous revelation.

"Just a minute, Mr. Spencer," Lillian interrupted. "I want to be very sure of something first."

She went to the door, opened it cautiously, went down the corridor to the stairway, returned and closed the door. As she did so, I again heard just that faintest suspicion of a tinkle and taught in Allen Drake's eyes a glance of amusement at my bewilderment.

In a second I was hotly resentful.
