Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

The Ideal Union. Here is a letter so sincere and helpful that I am going to give all my readers a chance to acquaint themselves with the viewpoint of a sane and joyful woman who writes out of her own experience to aid others. Here is what she writes: "To my mind an ideal union is one founded on perfect trust and good comradeship. Not the happy-go-lucky marriages we hear of nowadays where Mary and John, after a couple of months' sojourn in dance halls and cabarets, suddenly take a chance at matrimony and when the brief honeymoon has waned are sincerely tired of each other. "In every happy home love must be the central factor. Without it work becomes drudgery and even our daily life becomes tiresome and monotonous. For to love rightly means that one's eyes are closed to all the littleness of life, to all but the freshness, comfort, cheerfulness and other 'as long as they both shall live.' "If such a partnership is to be a success there should be no boss, but each should be tolerant of the other. In the disposition of the joint finances wife and husband should

How Madge Helped Katie to Tell the Truth at Last. At the sudden jangle of bells outside the library door, all of us were on our feet, and three of us made a simultaneous dash for the door. Only my father remained standing motionless, waiting for the outcome of the scene to which the bells were the cue. Allen Drake reached the door first, swung it open, and dashed into the corridor. As he did so, we heard a choking gasp of terror, a patter of swiftly running footsteps, then a fall. I was at his side as he stooped over a huddled, moaning figure upon the floor, and pushed him away roughly. "I will take her," I whispered hoarsely, kneeling and gathering Katie's trembling form into my arms. She screamed wildly as I touched her, for in her unreasoning fright she had closed her eyes tightly, and her own moans had prevented her from hearing my whisper. I put my lips to her ear and spoke clearly, firmly: "Right in here, Katie."

very mention of the bells caused her uncontrollable terror. "Vot I tell you, Miss Underwood? You see! Dot coom true. He can coom und do tings—" She turned on Lillian with animal-like rage, while the rest of us stared, wondering what the ravings of the girl might mean. But Lillian evidently understood. She crossed the room, looked steadily at the girl, and then laughed lightly. "I thought you had better sense," she said contemptuously. "Watch me, now." She walked to the door of the library, and from behind it took up something which I recognized as a gaily-colored harness of bells which it was Junior's delight to wear when he "played horse."

all understood as we saw the color creep back into her face, the wild look leave her eyes. And I, for one, now understood the meaning of the colloquy. Katie had attributed the sound of the bells to the "black magic" with which the man, Anton, had so cunningly threatened her. "O—O—I so glad," she breathed, then turned with a simple dignity to my father. "I tell you truth now," she said.

Prayer Each Day

Let them praise Thy great and terrible Name.—Ps. 89:1. Our dear Lord and Master, Thou hast set each family apart, and Thou dealest with them each according to duties well done, and faith well founded. We come, humbly imploring Thy forgiveness for the errors and mistakes of the past, and we beseech Thy guidance for the days to follow. Well and truly do we need Thy every hour, and therefore we entreat Thy guidance, without which we would be led astray, or fall into danger. Guard us from the terror by night, and the arrow that flyeth at noonday. We have our trials, our necessities and our distresses. All these we put into Thy hands, asking that Thou wouldst deal with us as little children. We have no fear of Thee, Almighty Father, for we have the assurance of Thy love. Watch over all our business matters; help us to be honest and square in attending to them, and do Thou so guide us that we shall always do what is right in Thy sight. Lead us safely along the journey of life, and at last give to us all the Eternal Life, which we long for more than for the hidden treasures of earth. Save all whom we love from passion, pride, and discontent, and finally bring us into Thy presence, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WILLIAM F. JACOBS, D.D., Clinton, South Carolina.
