

When the Mikado's son goes to school. Little Prince Suminomiya, youngest son of the Emperor of Japan, photographed upon his arrival at the Peers' School at Onaka to enter the first grade elementary course. The officers who are saluting are members of the Imperial Staff assigned to take the Prince to school.

SPRING AT MOUNT VERNON. An interesting view of Washington's historic home on the Potomac, taken from the air by Major General William Mitchell, of the Army Air Service, during the occasion of the recent pilgrimage to Mount Vernon by all of General Mitchell's brother-in-law, President Wilson (excepting former President Wilson) to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the planting of a memorial elm tree on the treasured estate. U. S. Army Air Service, from Wyand

RACES RIDERLESS. An interesting feature of the second race at the opening of the racing season at the Jamaica track was when Mollie Barnes, a 60-to-1 shot, threw Slaughter, her jockey, but continued in the race. The camera happened to be in the home position and turned into the stretch with the rest of the entrants. Sea King was the favorite and won out at the finish. Robin, Mollie Barnes managed to come in second in a field of twelve.

YOU'D PUFF, TOO. An interesting smoke picture of the industrious little engine that pushes its cars up the 37 per cent grade of the inclined railway that leads to the 6,000-foot summit of Mount Washington, the highest point in the White Mountains, New Hampshire's aptly called "Switzerland of America."

THE RECORD FACIAL OSTERMOOR. Some whiskers! Way back in 1881 Zach T. Wilcox, of Carson City, Nev., became puffed at a dull razor and swore he'd never shave again. And he has religiously kept his vow ever since, so that to-day, forty-one years later, his luxuriant chin foliage has grown to the record length of 12 feet 3 inches. Next!
