Holy Trinity church has seldom been the scene of so pretty an event as the nuptials of Miss Fay Marshall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Marshall, and Mr. William Dustin Robinson, which occurred at high noon Wednesday. The prominence of the bride and groom in social circles had awakened general interest in the ceremony and this interest was not decreased by the whispers that the gowns were to be of unusual elegance. At the first note of the wedding march the bridal party moved through the entrance, making a striking and brilliant appearance. The attendants of the groom headed the slow advance up the aisle to the chancel; they were Mr. Fritz Westerman, Mr. Harry Krug, Mr. Charles Clough, Mr. George Woods, Mr. Mattson Baldwin, and Mr. John Dorgan. Then came two bridesmaids, Miss Rachel Brock and Miss Jeanette Wilson. The maid of honor, Miss Lottie Whedon, followed them, and last the bride, attended by her father. She wore a white satin gown with a court train trimmed in point lace; she was enveloped in a tulle veil and carried a flowing cluster of white rose buds. Miss Whedon's gown was pink silk with pearl trimming. Miss Brock was gowned in pink Dresden silk with pink chiffon bodice. Miss Wilson's costume was pink silk; all of the bride's attendants carried shower bouquets of pink chrysanthemums. The groom was met at the altar and was attended by Mr. Sam E. Low. The ceremony was the always impressive one of ritualistic form—the betrothal at the foot of the chancel steps and the solemnization at the altar. Rev. John Hewitt performed the ceremony. An informal reception and wedding luncheon followed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Marshall. At the table were the bride and groom, the bridal party, Rev. and Mrs. Hewitt, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Wheeler, of Omaha, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Floyd, of Omaha, Dr. and Mrs. Everett, Miss White and Mr. Marshall. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson will be at home after February 1st at 1320 P street.
