Every Wednesday there is a party in the sanitarium that is oblivious to the weather. The temperature of the pool is kept at about the same point whatever the thermometer registers outside. The number of ladies who have got to be expert swimmers is large and receives weekly accessions. Miss Elliott dives, swims under water, and does all kinds of somersaults with the ease of life long training and she has only learned in the last few years. Mrs. Ogden is another who has mastered the salt wave. Mrs. Ogden's high diving and grand and lofty tumbling makes the little wake of followers catch their breath. These ladies have practiced various methods of saving the drowning until grasped in most any position they can swim with ease with the limbs or portions of limbs that the imitation drowning person has left free. To those who are unable to take a summer vacation the sanitarium pool with its 142x50 feet of cool, green water, is refreshing and stimulating. Without it Lincoln would be a hot desert filled with travellers with hot parched throats who are constantly assailed by the temptation of Job, viz: "To curse God and die." A dip into the ocean water at the sanitarium recalls long stretches of fine sand that morning and evening are lapped by the waves that come and go at the moon's caprice. But the pool has not only reminiscent beauties; the dabs of light from the glass ceiling have an iridescent glow and a grotesque, poster outline all their own. As the swimmer's heads are momentarily encircled by the aureolas of light and as they emerge into the dimness around the dazzle, it is Tony Pastor, magic, now you see me and now you don't, show.
