PRESIDENTIAL WEEK AT THE EXPOSITION

Nature wore her sweetest smile of welcome. Omaha put on her most gracious airs. The event was ushered in by the dual parade of Ak-Sar-Ben and the electric illuminations of the stellar constellations on Tuesday evening. By 4 p. m. the people filed into the seats which had been erected on Farnam street. By eight o'clock there was not space enough in the streets for a canary bird's feet. The presidential party arrived at 9 p. m. and when President McKinley took his seat a shout went up from thousands of throats that called into action the most sluggish pulse. The electric illumination of Farnam street was nearly, if not quite as fine, as what I saw in Paris when the Czar was received in June of '97. The train bearing the diplomatic party, under the conduct of Senator Thurston, was three hours late owing to a wreck on the B. & O. However, the carriages of the party arrived just in time to fall into line, with the president's party under conduct of Assistant Secretary Meikeljohn.

At 9 a. m. Wednesday the entire delegation met at the Omaha club rooms, where President McKinley was entertained and proceeded in order of rank to the exposition in carriages. The route within the exposition grounds, to which carriages on no other occasion have been admitted, was guarded on either side the entire line, by files of soldiers. Alighting at the steps of the platform President McKinley and his party were seated. Such an ovation was extended by 90,000 people as well might inspire the soul of any chieftain. The president's speech was full of epigrammatic sentences which will pass into American classics. The band played national airs. At the close the ladies of the entire party were driven to the Omaha club rooms and the president and gentlemen of the diplomatic delegation, with their hosts dined at the Exposition cafe.

The club rooms were fitted up in royal fashion. The tables were embowered in roses and garlanded with the flags of all nations. The wives of the Chinese and Korean ministers were guests of honor. The tiara of diamonds and pearls of the Chinese madame would purchase a kingdom. The toilet of the Omaha ladies was exceptional. The universal verdict of the Washington ladies was to the effect that no social function in Washington had been celebrated with more artistic taste. At 3 p. m. the ladies retired to their carriages and joined the president's party at the exposition and were driven again between lines of "our boys in blue" to the platform of the Indian encampment, and the "Battle of the Tribes" took place a great moving panorama of painted chiefs, squaws, papoosees, horses and ponies, in all the gorgeous hues of the morning of our civilization. The effect was a perfect color symphony. At the close, the grand review, when President McKinley descended from the platform, walked down the line and greeted the chiefs of the various tribes, again in carriages the entire party were driven to the banquet hall, where President McKinley sat amid flags and floating white doves. At the center of the table, the diplomatic corps next in rank. After dinner speeches were made by General Miles, General Manderson and Senator Thurston. Thence in carriages to the splendid pyrotechnic display, where the lagoon was a sea of foam and the heavens studded with shooting gems of aerial brilliancy.

Thursday was army and navy day at the exposition. Never has the western world witnessed such a scene. General Miles was the central figure, but the military blue and gold of the entire party was as one vast sparkling diadem. Governor Holcomb and Senator Allen spoke in behalf of the state. General Miles brought the entire audience to their feet in one deafening peal of applause, which was echoed again and again until the air vibrated and was tremulous with cheers. Senor Quesada, the Cuban minister, moved the great audience as one heart by his pathetic expressions of gratitude to the American people and the army and navy.

The exercises concluded, the guests lunched in Markel hall, which had been decorated with army and navy colors. The gay uniforms, the brilliant costumes, the after dinner speeches, all sparkled. The party passed the remainder of the day in the Midway, which Senator Manderson facetiously termed the "dimway." Most entertaining were the comments of the Chinese minister and his beautiful wife upon the illusions of the Midway. The Chinese madame was gorgeously attired in native costume and daintily moved on her tiny feet supported by her maid.

Friday was civil government day. At an early hour the vast auditorium was filled. Seats were reserved for the "boys in blue," who had guarded well the routes throughout the successive fetes. At 11 a. m. the government representatives and their ladies filed to the platform. General Shafter was the head of the day. The vast audience burst into a spasm of cheers as he rose to his feet. Assistant Secretary of War Meikeljohn then spoke. The Chinese minister surprised everybody by the elegance of his diction and his entire freedom from any accent. He spoke the purest English, choosing for his theme international relations.

Senor Quesada again electrified the audience by his magnetic pathos of gratitude for Cuban liberty under the stars and stripes.

The Korean minister was introduced and spoke briefly, not being able to clothe his thoughts in English.

Senator Thurston was the last speaker and closed the presidential fete with a peroration worthy the celebrated event. Then the banquet at the cafe and the closing of the high functions of the great exposition climax. At the table sat General Shafter, General Miles and a score of military officers of high rank. Governor Holcomb, Senator Allen, Senator Thurston, with the full list of Washington guests with their hosts and hostesses.

The remainder of the day was given to the examination of the various buildings, where the resources of the west were the theme of the distinguished guests. Notable on this afternoon was the interview of Senator Thurston, attended by his party, with the chief "American Horse," on "diplomatic relations with the Great Father," as they style President McKinley.
