JUBILEE WEEK IN CHICAGO.

Living in Chicago during jubilee week is like being in a foreign city. If you find the side walk in front of the auditorium blocked you may know that the Chinese minister is expected to walk to his carriage in full regalia. Or if you hear the clatter of hoofs you must rush to the window and in all probability you will see the president being escorted by the Illinois Hussars. Even in shopping there is an air of expectancy everywhere for Mason may be in the store buying one of his negligee ties for the ball or some other celebrity may be just around the corner and burst upon you at any minute in all his glory.

To begin, the jubilee Sunday was beautiful, but the supply of tickets for the religious services at the Auditorium had been exhausted for two weeks. However, the newspapers announced that holders of tickets who had not claimed them by 8 o'clock would find their chairs occupied by the general public. This encouraged the unfortunate who had no tickets and the sidewalk was packed with an unmanageable crowd from six on. Even people with places of honor on the platform were not able to see what the doors of the Auditorium looked like.

Booker Washington, the negro speaker of the evening, seemed to be the next in interest to the president. He is a favorite with a Chicago audience and is a man of intelligence, combining with it that gift of oratory which his race possesses. I shall not tell you about the addresses but each man tried to make us proud of being Americans if we were not already.

A person cannot expect two days of sunshine in succession in Chicago, so "the next day it rained." Some people saw in this ominous forboding that the peace commissioners would not succeed, but others not blessed with a good imagination felt sorry to spoil their best clothes in such weather. On Tuesday night the great ball was celebrated and it certainly was a brilliant affair. I never realized the beauty of the Auditorium theatre until I saw it cleared of seats and stage with nothing to detract from the curve of those arches studded with electric lights. The rose color of the frescoes seemed to soften the effect of the whole. At the farthest end of the building was stationed an orchestra in a long portico among the palms for the dancers, which played selections from Sousa and Strauss, while the orchestra for promenaders in the foyer gave Schubert's serenade and dreamy songs.

Mrs. Palmer, as everybody knows, was the chairman of the ball committee and all eyes were centered upon her. One of her enemies, for she has them like the rest of us common mortals, remarked that anybody could look beautiful if they were gowned in the most gorgeous creation that a Paris dressmaker's brain could conceive, and as for herself, she considered her face hard and uninteresting. Mrs. Palmer was dressed in black with a narrow clinging skirt demi train, embroidered in brilliant. The waist was décolleté with soft, white net mysteriously arranged about the neck. Her jewels were pearls and diamonds. The Palmer box was next the president's and later in the evening she received guests of honor there.

When the stirring strains of the "Star Spangled Banner" were heard, we all knew the president was about to enter and all present rose to their feet. Our president has a fine head and imposing presence and I think friend or foe will join in according him that much praise. There always came a feeling of assurance to me when, during the war, I would come across McKinley's picture hanging in the shop windows beside that of poor little Alphonso.

The president's party left the ball at an early hour but other celebrities remained. The box opposite the president's was decorated with chrysanthemums in honor of Japan, and in this box sat some interesting people. There was the Chinese minister, who is very fond of American ladies' society and is known as quite a ladies' man at Washington. Then the minister from Corea has a most wonderful beard, consisting of thirty hairs, which he is not allowed to grow until he is forty years old, and which is far too precious to pull when embarrassed as American men do. I noticed that later in the evening all these foreign curios took to the champagne and salted almonds in the restaurant as though they had been raised on them. Then of course there was General Miles looking grand in his uniform, and Shafter, whom I do not believe has lost a pound of flesh with all his campaigning, and after the dancing began there were lovely Chicago ladies in pinks and blues whirling about everywhere.

The procession on Wednesday was like most others of its kind, good, but not original. The crowds were something dreadful and ought to teach the authorities to train the police in large cities for such occasions, as they are trained in London. Only the proverbial good nature of an American crowd saved them from some awful accident.

The only glimpse that Chicago had of Mrs. McKinley was when she watched the procession from a window of the Union League club as it passed in front of the reviewing stand. She has a pleasant face and was becomingly gowned in grey. The crowd was delighted when they recognized her and cheered enthusiastically.

The banquet Wednesday evening was one of the finest ever given in this land. The toasts brought forward our men of talent and showed how the whole country was united under the stars and stripes. One incident of the affair seemed very un-American to me and that was having the ladies sit in the galleries as lookers-on and bring their own sandwich if they cared for anything to eat. It savored of a Chinese theatre and detracted from the dignity of both parties. I myself prepared to read the speeches next morning at home and applaud from afar.
