

THE PRINCE WOES IN VAIN.

A Roumanian prince has laid at the feet of a Denver girl his title and his fortune. He is Prince Ghika and he is really a very charming fellow. Miss Della Rogers of this city, daughter of Dr. Rogers, has been, since early last summer, the object of Prince Ghika's devotion. They met at a soiree in Paris. Miss Rogers is beautiful and one of the successful prima donnas of Europe.

The Prince is refined and polished, unusually bright and cultured. Miss Rogers is a grand laughter of a millionaire. The prince is three times a millionaire and has been rejected many times by Miss Rogers. The Denver girl measures five feet nine inches in height and with her imposing figure looks every inch of it. The prince, with his title, his money, his fascinating ways, can only bring himself up to five feet four inches of manhood—not an inch more.

"The little prince—he is delightful. Why, I am head and shoulders taller than he." Then she adds something about being married to her art, but who knows? There is the title, the money, the irresistible ways of a nobleman living in Paris. It may be the art, but some there are who ascribe all her indifference to these five feet. For nearly a year the prince has been bent on winning Miss Rogers for his wife. He called upon the beautiful prima donna's mother some little time before he had been presented to Miss Rogers, and asked permission to pay his addresses. He was referred to the daughter, after the good American fashion. Miss Rogers is twenty-four years old. They did not meet, however, until one evening in the summer at Mue. Somebody's salon.

Now has come to the United States and Denver the story that the prince's suit has been cut short by a newspaper publication of a former infatuation on his part for Clara Ward, the notorious Princess de Chimay, who eloped with the Hungarian musician, Rigo.

Miss Rogers, accompanied by her mother, left last month for Cologne to fill an engagement there. She may go to Berlin later, but that is not yet settled.—Denver Post.

"Brown would never have reached the top of the ladder if it had not been for his wife."

"I supposed there was some woman at the bottom of it."

"Pa, where did you get the baby?"

"I bought him."

"You got swindled, Pa."
