A VALUABLE SUGGESTION REGARDING THE "TRUST" ISSUE.

All of the astute and resourceful politicians seem to be blind to the fact that the "trusts" can be kept from becoming a practical issue between the conflicting parties in the Presidential campaign of next year. The republicans, who are as greatly interested in eliminating this topic from consideration by the voters for presidential electors as the democrats are in keeping it prominently before them, have in their own hands the power to destroy the hopes of their opponents in this respect, and at the same time add to their own reputation as constructive rather than destructive, and increase their prestige by proposing the first practical step toward effective national measures respecting the "trusts." They have only to present and press, with or without a recommendation such as President McKinley may make in his annual message, a resolution in congress, which will meet in December with a Republican majority in both branches, proposing an amendment to the constitution giving congress that authority to deal with the "trusts" which, it is admitted, it does not now possess. It would take, of course, two-thirds in each house to adopt such a resolution, and the republicans have not two-thirds in either house, but the democrats could not afford to oppose such a proposition, which is directly in the line of their contention against "trusts," and there can be no doubt that the resolution would be adopted. It would be idle as every senator or representative would admit, to attempt any new legislation for the better regulation of "trusts," since the supreme court has decided that congress has not the constitutional power to enact such legislation, and any attempt to substitute a bill of that character would be too obviously mischievous to succeed. The proposed amendment to the constitution could not well be opposed as a dilatory measure, because it offers the only way of successful dealing with the matter, and besides, it could be ratified by three-fourths of the states, according to the constitutional requirement, in abundant time for action by the congress to be elected next year and which comes into existence on March 4, 1901.—From "How to Eliminate 'Trusts' from the Presidential Campaign," by Henry Macfarland, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for September.

TABLE TALK.

Who can not remember the time when their appetite has been stimulated by the odor of aromatic herbs! And again this pleasant sensation is theirs while reading "A Talk About Herbs," in the September issue of Table Talk, and all manner of good things crowd the memory and imagination, and they will immediately decide that thyme, sage, sweet, marjoram, and the host of others shall be in more common use in the kitchens of today. Other timely and helpful articles in this issue are: "The Evolution of a Single Sauce;" "The School Lunch Basket;" "Friends in Need," or easy and satisfactory cake baking; "Household Methods;" "The Early Training of Children;" &c. A sample copy of the magazine free to any of our readers who send name and address to Table Talk Publishing Co., Philadelphia.
