"Why must I suffer?" moaned a helpless one,
 With lifelong anguish tortured and forlorn,
 Before the answer came, ages were done;
 But then a post from his line was born.
 —Arlo Bates, in October Century.

Oh! there is no love like the old love.
 That depends upon how old she is.

Maude—Jack has never asked me for a kiss
 Bessie—The old thief.

He—(after the fourteenth round) How I love to dance.
 She—Then I should think you'd learn.

Maude—Arthur says he would love me just the same if I should lose my money.
 Bessie—That might be; but it isn't likely he'd let you know it.

She—Has the Count anything laid by for a rainy day?
 He—Yes, I understand he's engaged to an American heiress.

I've got a splendid seat for the parade. So?
 Yes, Dewey can't help seeing me. Is he such a hero?
 I should say so. Why there's not a magazine in the country would dare to refuse his manuscript.

Club life is all aglow and on the alert. The cool invigorating breezes of fall stimulate the members to do and dare those things which shall improve and advance club interests. This past week a goodly number of the clubs of the state have entered upon their year's study, while in the coming week the large majority will be busy with their regular work. We wish at this time, to ask the clubs of the state to appoint a reporter to send regular accounts of their club meetings to the club department of this paper. This would also tend to increase the interest, the sympathies, and the ties between sister clubs, and thus bring about a closer unity which must result in greater strength to the state federation.

Discussion in its broadest sense is the
