WEBER PIANO CO.

The Maurice Grau Opera Co., of New York, have recently made arrangements whereby the WEBER GRAND PIANOS will be used exclusively by them at the Metropolitan opera house in New York City, and in all their concerts throughout the United States. This marked recognition of the merits of the WEBER PIANO easily places it above all other pianos in the most cultured musical circles.

The general agency for this renowned instrument is held by

HYDRAULIC FORGING.

Fully Developed in Germany and Utilized
by England.

Announcement is made that the Brenner-Schumacher process of hydraulic forging, so fully developed in Germany, has been introduced in England by a Leeds concern, who have made a press that exerts a pressure of 700 tons, and can make long and slow strokes or short and quick ones, as desired; a large steam cylinder is used instead of a pumping engine, the piston of which is prolonged and acts as a ram for exerting hydraulic pressure on the forging tools through the medium of a second hydraulic cylinder. Briefly, there are two steam cylinders placed over the press to lift the forging crosshead, by which the upper forging tool is carried, and, when it is desired to work in the ordinary way with heavy pressure, the admission and exhaust of steam in these lifting cylinders is controlled by the same lever which regulates the admission and the exhausting of the steam in the large driving cylinder; but for quick working, direct and uninterrupted communication is established by means of a separate cock between these lifting cylinders and the boiler. In this way there is then always the full boiler pressure beneath the cylinder, tending to keep the crosshead and upper tool at the top of the stroke, but the main steam cylinder, which puts on the forging pressure—through the hydraulic mechanism—is of so much greater area than the combined areas of the two small cylinders that the crosshead is pressed down with considerable force, although, of course, with less force than if the two lifting cylinders were exhausting in the usual way.
