The regular meeting of the city improvement society was held Thursday morning in the Union-Commercial club rooms. The officers of the club compose the park committee, and the secretary had notified the committee that the city council was ready to act with them. The ideal method of disposing of garbage is by a crematory which is self-sustaining in cities of this size.

A resolution was offered and adopted by the society recommending that all refuse, especially from the kitchen, be burned in stoves or furnaces.

The Paderewski concert assembled most of the people who love, or are related to those who love music. But before eight o'clock the entrance was inaccessible to those who had bought reserved seats. Carriage after carriage arrived and deposited its load of gen-tlems and ladies in this evening dress, in the snowy street. Before the entrance door there was an immovable, impenetrable mass of people whom the door keepers would not let in and who would not recede from their positions. Ladies and gentlemen dressed for the occasion were forced to paddle through an alley of half frozen water, only to be denied entrance by the ticket takers at the side entrance who referred them to the blockade at the front door. It was the familiar scene which has marred so many university commencement days here, only this occasion was in the night, the ticket-holders were in evening dress and the temperature was below zero. It was after nine before a tumbled, torn, angry, nervous audience confronted Paderewski himself who was evidently perturbed as only a highly strung sensitive artist can be. Then there were boys on the roof who sounded as though they were cracking it. When they were dislodged Paderewski began playing again with an expression of hopeless determination. However, before the evening was over the perfect acoustics of the hall and the evident sympathy and appreciation of the audience reconciled the player to the unfortunate and vexatious beginnings and he responded to overwhelming applause with two encores.

A valentine was given as a prize to the guest most successful.
