

Women in Men's Glubs.

An anteroom for women in a men's club house has been suggested by Mrs. Charles Henrotin at a meeting of the Young Fortnightly in the woman's club rooms in the Fine Arts building recently.

The Philadelphia Civics club, made up of women, has a lovely room in a corner where men visitors are received. Wouldn't it be beautiful if men's clubs would provide a similar stowaway for women? Now, if we must call at a man's club, we are obliged to stand around and be stared at in halls or wander out and wait on sidewalks.

The women applauded as if they were in earnest.

Mrs. Ira C. Wood, president of the Wednesday club, thought the ideal club would be that which shared intellectual and literary life with men. "We are leaving men nothing but the prosaic," she said.

"That makes me think of a young man I met the other day who dreaded looking into the future," said Mrs. Penoyer Sherman, president of the Woman's club. "He said to me, 'Men give their lives to their work because they want their wives to have all the comforts of home. The wives are at clubs studying, advancing. Tell me what the result will be in a few years. The women will have gone far ahead of the men. They will respect us less; we will respect ourselves less' "

Then Miss Lillian Gillett, president of the Young Fortnightly, got up with:

"Only yesterday I asked Professor— of the university, 'Have you met Mrs. Blank of Michigan avenue?' 'Oh, yes,' he replied: 'she's like too many other women, educated not wisely, but too well.'"

"You needn't fear that a man cannot keep intellectual pace with a woman. He gets a schooling daily that cannot come to her. He can hold his own," said Mrs. Henry Wade Rogers.

"I should like to see men's and women's clubs joined together," said Mrs. Gertrude Beck of the Business Women's association. "I should like to have fathers teach their sons the art of marrying so as to check the rush of women into business."

I remember many years ago when the first woman's club was organized in Chicago," went on Mrs. Henrotin. "We asked our husbands if we might join. They said yes, but can't you call it something else besides a club? We never discussed politics, equal suffrage and religion. We talked together of Greece and Rome. We were almost afraid of one another, but now since this great revolution of women there is a change from the sense of exclusion to one of inclusion."

"We should be careful of our club membership," said Mrs. Cyrus McCormick. "Every member should be an active one. Idleness kills all interest. The ideal club quickens the conscience, widens the sympathies and stimulates ambition."

"Women's clubs have made women a part of the world," said Mrs. Rogers. "We have a share in bringing the kingdom on earth. I think the coming of the kingdom has lagged because it has been a one-sided affair."

A woman within a pale-green waist said that many clubs were organized for the sake of the afternoon tea.

"The only way they vary their life is to serve good tea once in awhile.—The Record.

ANDREW CARNEGIE ON TRUSTS.

A director of the Standard Oil Company has recently published in The Independent an article declaring trusts to be good for the workingman. To the May Century, Andrew Carnegie of the Carnegie Company, which rivals the Standard Oil for first place among the world's great corporations, will contribute an essay taking the same ground. In this article, which bears the title "Popular Illusions about Trusts," the great steel manufacturer argues that the evils of trusts are generally self-corrective; that no trust can live long unless it secures a virtual monopoly of the commodity it deals in; and that "the only people who have reason to fear trusts are those who trust them." In the same magazine "The Real Danger of Trusts,"—their menace to the independence of the individual and the state—will be pointed out in a vigorous editorial.

Jack—Old Newriche is terribly worried about that pretty daughter of his.

Tom—What's the matter? Does she want to marry some foreign nobleman?

Jack—No; that's just the trouble. She is engaged to one of these American chappies, and the old gentleman says he is rich enough to afford the real thing, and doesn't want any cheap imitations.—Town Topics.
