only son. A true antiquarian and artist himself, Mr. Morris inherited the tastes and talents which made him so interesting and lovable. Mrs. Savage is in Boston. Mr. Morris leaves a wife and a young son, Richardson Savage Morris.

Do You Read Poetry?

You have heard persons say, "I never read poetry." If this remark is made affectedly, as if to say, "Poetry is silly, and I am above such frivolity as reading it," there is no need to comment upon the foolish ignorance of any one who knows no more than to talk so absurdly. But if it be said modestly, and because the speaker believes that poetry is a strange and foreign thing requiring a peculiar talent for its appreciation, then the state of mind from which the remark comes is one to be pitied. Poetry is the earliest form of writing. All the oldest books are either in verse or are in poetical style. Babies begin with "nursery rhymes," and understand them before they can understand prose. Prose requires training for its appreciation, and a young reader who can see the literary beauties of prose needs little teaching in literature.—July St. Nicholas.

On the Bleachers.

Van Loon—Well, those Bostons are simply back numbers!

De Kay—No; have beans.

"A man with a bill," announced the court chamberlain.

The king was visibly startled.

"He must be a bird!" exclaimed his majesty, thinking of the rigorous measures he had taken to prevent his creditors approaching the royal person.

She—Am I to understand, then, that when you took my hand in yours last night you intended it as a proposal of marriage?

Mrs. Tracy—Do you realize, my dear, that you have never done anything to save your fellow men any suffering?

Mr. Tracy—Didn't I marry you?

The Sluth—You say he was a suspicious-looking person?

The Vidocy—Well, he had on a covert coat.
