SOCIETY

As the last moon of summer goes into its third quarter, and the society columns are left without even that luminous face to scan, the awful possibility looms out of a darkening sky that even weather reports may fail. For as the ever lengthening procession of pilgrims moves on to new discovered fern-brakes, or old-renowned moss banks and rock beaches, the hot winds and tropical rains, forsooth, remain to be contemplated. In fact, they persistently thrust themselves upon individual and public notice, and any attempt to create an enjoyable atmosphere for a company large or small must take them into account. Advantage was taken of the interval of washed August air in the informal afternoon at home which opened the beautiful new O street mansion of Doctor and Mrs. R. E. Giffen. The occasion was in honor of Mrs. Giffen's sister, Mrs. Alfred Spielman of Chicago, and Miss Seidel, also of that city. The guests were sorority friends of Mrs. Spielman, better known as Miss Nellie Lau. They gathered in the cool, wide rooms, fragrant with a profusion of roses, artistic in effects of deep windows tapestry and plate glass. A most delightful and informal reunion was enjoyed by the following ladies: Mesdames Lewis, Marshall, H. P. Lau, Peter Lau, Oscar Junge, E. C. Folsom, Corwin, Haggard, Emory Hardy and Harry Harley. Misses Kirker, Whiting, Richards, Houtz and Hammond.

Porter-Hawley.

An August wedding as charming and unhurried in all its appointments as a June bridal day, was that of Professor George Neyman Porter and Miss Maude Muller Hawley, on Thursday evening at half after eight. Both young people are Lincoln students, well known in University and High school circles, and a very large party gathered in the First Christian church to witness the ceremony. The cool green of palms filled aisles and chancel, and the colors, pink and white, used throughout in all the wedding festivities, predominated in the floral decorations. Doctor J. T. Thompson officiated, using the ring service. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Kirckstein and Miss Edelmänn, organ and piano blending in the majestic strains of Lohengrin, as the bridal party moved down the centre aisle. The ushers were: Mr. Will McShane and Mr. Thomas Maxwell. After them came the bridesmaid, Miss Grace Beatrice Stewart, niece of the bride, in pink silk with bridesmaid roses, and the matron of honor, Mrs. Charles B. Jackson of Chicago, in pink organdie with American Beauty roses. The bride came in on the arm of her father, who gave her away. She was attired in white mousseline de soie made over white silk, demi-train, elaborately trimmed in wide pleating edged with shirred gauze ribbon, and with an exquisite fichu of the mousseline. She carried white roses. Down the south aisle came the groom with his best man, Mr. Frank Hawley, brother of the bride. The men of the party were all in full dress and as they are nearly all of unusual height, made an imposing company, which moved away, after the service, to the Mendelssohn march.

A reception was given the bridal party, immediately after the ceremony, by Mrs. A. N. Young, cousin of the bride, at 512 North Twelfth street. The house was lighted with pink and white candelabra. Punch was served in the reception room by Miss Edith Haynie and the Misses Deo, ices and cakes in the dining room by Misses Edelmänn, Julia Deweese, Nellie Ingalls, and Lulu Fullerton. There were readings by Professor Milton Farley and several selections from Paderewski rendered by Mr. Larkham Scott, but the important occupation of the evening was viewing the unusual display of exquisite and costly wedding gifts. On account of the number of guests both from the city and from abroad, these were exceptionally rare and beautiful.

A distinguished guest was Mrs. Helen M. Gougar of Lafayette, Ind. Others from out of town were Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hawley, of Nelson, Nebr.; Dr. and Mrs. Walter Remy, Adams, Nebr.; Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hawley and Miss Daisy Hawley, of Brock, Nebr.; Mesdames Chas. B. Johnson, of Chicago; J. J. Holt, Unadilla; N. J. Porter, G. E. Collins, Lead, S. D.; Messrs. J. G. Remy, Bradshaw; G. L. Scott, Oberlin, O.; Professor Olson, of Tecumseh; Professor Milton Farley, Fargo, S. D.

Many of the visitors arrived early and were in the city for a full week of festivities preceding the ceremony. Among the entertainments that have been enjoyed by these are a tea given last Friday evening by Mrs. I. N. Scott, and another on Saturday evening by Mrs. Frank Spangler. Mrs. I. N. Perkins gave a linen shower for Miss Hawley on Saturday, and Miss Margaret Hallett entertained Monday evening at tea. The entire week has been one that attests the esteem felt for the charming young bride and the happy groom, who depart soon for Peru, Nebraska, where they will be at home after September 15th, Mr. Porter holding the position there of head of the department of English in the State Normal school.

Mrs. J. W. Winger gave a musicale on Tuesday morning in honor of Miss Stoddard, her guest. Mrs. E. Lewis Baker, Miss Oakley and Miss Gaylord sang, Miss Eiche played the 'cello, Miss Dales the violin, and Miss Hoover, Miss Hammond, Miss Hollowbush and Miss Syford were the pianists and accompanists. Ices and cakes were served and the music ran to fantasies, barcarolles, and summer phases of musical expression. Mrs. M. Scott, Mrs. E. P. Brown, Miss Stella Kirker and Miss Root of Chicago, assisted Mrs. Winger in serving her guests.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Barras entertained the Social Recreation Club on Monday evening. A delightfully informal meeting was enjoyed with cards, music and dainty refreshments. Those invited were: Messrs. and Mesdames John Garten, G. H. McCain, J. A. Cauger, J. J. Davis, Dave Reed, Al Bowen, Harry Bowen, Mrs. Constant, the Misses Cauger and the Misses Reed.

The elopement of Pryor Markel, formerly of this city, with Miss Nellie Kitchen daughter of Mr. Ralph Kitchen of the Paxton Hotel of Omaha, caused a sensation in the dullest season of the year. The bride is only eighteen and her parents were determined she should not wed Mr. Markel. They kept her
