Tom Johnson Looming Up.
Another evidence that the late leader of the democracy is being pushed out of prominence, is in the attitude of the Chicago Public, the best of all the country reform newspapers. Mr. Post, the editor, disparages, as he always has done, the free silver panacea, but he goes further and shows the absurdity of the erstwhile Boy Orator's scheme for suppressing monopolies by means of state exclusion thereof and a system of congressional licensing. The Public is a powerful paper of its kind, and its swerving from the unconditional support of the Editor Candidate is very significant. It is to the radical element of United States politics what the New York Nation is to the conservative forces. It is a dignified organ of the extreme opinion. It is conducted along scientific lines of the higher politics and commands the respect of thousands who sneer at the sophomoric Commoner. The Public doesn't coldly throw overboard the loquacious leader, but none the less veers away from him and leaves to its intelligent clientele the pleasant task of reading between the lines and seeing the hidden argument. As the ascendancy of the Nebraskan diminishes in Mr. Post's paper there is a crescent enthusiasm for all that Tom Johnson stands for. There is a steady putting forward of the idea of a democracy not tied to one man or one issue and this means that the spell of the personality of the Wordy One is broken, so far as concerns to higher class of political, social and economical reformers. The Public's position is an indication that the day of the pilgrim candidate is done. As the paper represents the high-water mark of intelligent opposition to the purposes and methods of the administration, and as Tom Johnson seems to be defined in the mind of the Public's editor as a sort of demi-Divinity, one cannot help surmising that Tom Johnson is not in sympathy with the continued leadership of the man who made two picturesque losings in the fight for the presidency. Tom Johnson is the new champion of the extremist ideas and in subtle fashion he is being foisted into the place of honor. Thus we see that not only are the reorganizers opposed to further Wilkieism, but the better sort of radicals are convinced that a new man is needed to carry radicalism to its logical political results. There is no better indication that the disaffection with the former democratic Demosthenes permeates all factions than the skillfully handled editorials of the Public. Not an unkind word has it to say of the late leader. Indeed its compliments are very prettily paid all the time, but always there is the intimation that a new deal of some kind is needed, and always, even though by indirection, it is Tom Johnson who is put forth as the new champion of a reform that shall devote itself exclusively to putting the screws to the plutocracy.—The Mirror.

doubtedly this happening is unique in the history of magazine literature. The Cosmopolitan will endeavor to repeat its past success, with a Pan-American Exposition number, which will be even more attractive, if possible, than its World's Fair predecessor.

The most famous writers of the country have been invited to take part in the preparation of this issue. After many days' careful study of all the wonderful scenes of the exposition, more than a hundred photographs have been prepared, which, taken as a whole, give a thorough conception of the marvels of this exposition.

It is doubtful if any book, selling at forty times the price of the magazine, will give any description of the fair which will approach in interest and artistic value the September Cosmopolitan.

Those who visit the fair will preserve this number as a delightful reference book in the years to come, and those who are unable to go there will secure such a comprehensive view of its main attractions as will be worthy of preservation.

Kipling's Impressions of Yellowstone Canon.

Of the Grand Canon of the Yellowstone, Rudyard Kipling writes: "All I can say is that without warning or preparation I looked into a gulf 1,700 feet deep, with eagles and fishhawks circling far below. And the sides of that gulf were one wild welter of color—crimson, emerald, cobalt, ochre, umber, honey splashed with port wine, snow-white, vermillion, lemon and silver gray in wide washes. The sides did not fall sheer, but were graven by time and water and air into monstrous heads of kings, dead chiefs—men and women of the old time. So far below that no sound of its strife could reach us, the Yellowstone River ran, a finger-wide strip of jade green. The sunlight took these wondrous walls and gave fresh hues to those that nature had already laid there. Evening crept through the pines that shadowed us, but the full glory of the day flamed in that canon as we went out very cautiously to a jutting piece of rock—blood-red or pink it was—that overhung the deepest deeps of all. Now I know what it is to sit enthroned amid the clouds of sunset as the spirits sit in Blake's pictures."

Join the Burlington's specially conducted excursion to Yellowstone Park and see this grandest and most beautiful of nature's marvels. Leaves Omaha Tuesday, August 20. Gets back on the morning of the 29th.

The entire expense of the trip will be less than $100. Information on request.

LITERARY NOTES.

The sale of thousands of copies of a ten-cent magazine at one dollar apiece was a very curious happening at the time of the Chicago World's Fair. The Cosmopolitan prepared a World's Fair number, contributed to by many famous writers, and so thoroughly illustrated that it surpassed even the most expensive book which had up to that time been issued. In those days the magazine was printed from two sets of plates only, and when these were worn out it was impossible, without a great loss of time, to put further editions on the press. The newsdealers, taking advantage of this condition, raised the price of The Cosmopolitan's World's Fair number to one dollar a copy. A few sales were even made toward the close at the phenomenal figure of five dollars. Un-
