Teachers' Institute.

Next week the city teachers' institute will be held in the high school building, beginning Monday and closing Friday. The regular sessions will be in the forenoon of each day, beginning at eight o'clock.

The afternoons will be reserved for voluntary meetings and consultations with reference to the work of the schools.

The lectures and their subjects will be as follows:

Professor Sherman Davis, university of Indiana, "Life Relations in Education."

Chancellor E. Benjamin Andrews, university of Nebraska, "Moot Points in Up-to-Date Teaching."

Professor R. K. Rowe, university of Chicago, "How to Teach Writing in the Public Schools."

Miss Sarah Webster, "Drawing."

Professor Davis' work in institutes receives favorable comment wherever he goes; while Chancellor Andrews' lectures always give profit and pleasure. Professor Rowe is one of the joint authors of the system of writing to be used in the schools, and is now connected with the department of education in the university of Chicago. He will undoubtedly render the teachers much assistance in planning for a forward movement in the teaching of writing.

Miss Webster is the newly elected supervisor of drawing and writing. She is expected to meet the teachers during the three last days of the institute for consultation and planning the work of her department for the coming year.

An interesting and profitable session is anticipated. All teachers in the city schools are required to attend unless excused, as the discussions and lectures

Free Recitals.

The subject of harmony is one which is worthy of our most serious consideration, not alone in its relation to the science of music, but to every human life. It is generally conceded that harmony of surroundings, both animate and inanimate, is absolutely essential to the best development of every human being; and the greater the talent, the natural ability, the more necessary this harmony becomes. It is an unconscious need, often—a need which brings irritation and diminution of mental powers—the possession of this mysterious something as unconsciously tending to the fullest development of these powers. And, generally speaking, in exact proportion to a person's mental ability is his sensitiveness to outward impressions and to harmony between himself and his surroundings.

Perhaps this innate longing in the hearts of men for the pure, the true and the beautiful may, in a measure account for the large attendance at the band concerts during the summer, and at every musical performance where admission is free.

In Omaha free organ recitals have been given by Mr. Butler at Trinity Cathedral on Sunday afternoons for several years. A program composed largely of classical organ music, with vocal or violin solo, fills the church regularly in hot weather and in cold, in sunshine and in storm. The popularity of these recitals is evidence both of the ability of the performers and of the desire of the people to hear something better than the rag-time melodies which greet their ears on week days.

With so many accomplished musicians in Lincoln, both vocalists and instrumentalists, why could not a similar series of free recitals be given in this city on Sunday afternoons? The effect of listening to good music cannot be other than refining and ennobling. The majority of the young people will not stay at home on Sunday afternoon, and if nothing more attractive is offered, they will spend the hours in aimless wandering around the streets, or in more harmful amusements. An hour spent in listening to noble music will go far toward rendering these coarse amusements distasteful; even the average mind will not turn readily from a Beethoven sonata to a street corner flirtation.

During the winter months the churches are warmed for the morning and evening services; an hour of music on Sunday afternoon could be furnished without expense through the cooperation of the church officials and the musicians, and would be in truth a work of philanthropy. That the people who most need entertainment will avail themselves of such opportunities, has been demonstrated in Omaha, and the difference in temperament between the residents of Omaha and Lincoln is not great.

Driverless Horses.

In the number of driverless horses daily rushing about the streets, Lincoln would win the prize in any contest. Occasionally a man is seated in the vehicle, but more often a small boy is holding the reins; and a simple holding of the narrow strips of leather by no means constitutes driving. Delivery wagons are whirled around corners with no regard for their own or the pedestrian's safety, while drays and carriages of all descriptions thunder over crossings and car tracks with a recklessness calculated to increase the popularity of accident insurance at least a hundred per cent a day. Teams are left standing unhitched by their drivers with a sublime indifference to consequences should anything come along of a startling nature to horseflesh, and not only in the residence portion of the city, but in front of down-town business blocks is this often true.

Section 1058 of the Revised Ordinances of the city of Lincoln plainly states: "No person, upon turning the corner of any street, or crossing the intersection of any street in the city of Lincoln, shall ride or drive any horse or horses or other animal with greater speed than at the rate of four miles an hour, under penalty of a fine of not more than ten dollars for each offense."

Section 1062 states as definitely: "No person shall leave any horse, horses, or other animal, attached to any carriage, wagon, cart, sleigh, sled, or other vehicle, in any parts of the streets of this city, without securely fastening such horse, horses or other animal, under penalty of a fine of not more than ten dollars."

A few complaints of the violation of these ordinances will perhaps be required by way of illustration of their practical meaning.

"Do you like your household duties?"
"Well, I like to do fancy work, but that's about all."
"I see; you do fancy work and don't fancy work."—Indianapolis Sun.
