

purity and initiative energy. Lead is an unusually picturesque village in which the Hearst free kindergarten is an important feature. Of pleasing architecture, the building is well adapted to the needs of the work carried on there with such success. The grounds are laid out with ornamental walks and flower beds, and are surrounded by a neat iron fence. The hills rising in the distance form an effective background for this very pretty picture of a thriving mining town.

Mr. Charles Butler Harris of Goshen, Indiana, American consul at Nagasaki, Japan, spent Tuesday in Lincoln, visiting his aunt, Mrs. Sarah F. Harris. Since Mr. Harris' appointment, the war in the Philippines has occurred. All the transports stop at Nagasaki and the American consul's place is far from being a sinecure. A year or two ago some lecturer in Lincoln, perhaps it was Colonel Denby or it may have been President Schuerman, told a story about the American consul at Nagasaki quelling a mutiny on board a ship which had put in there. The lecturer said that the consul took the leader by the coat-collar and threw him into the water. What really happened, the captain of the ship sent for Mr. Harris, who went immediately down to the pier. As he stepped on board he was intercepted by a drunken sailor who said, "I understand you have come down here to talk with me." The consul looked at him and replied: "I shall have a few words to say to you when you are sober." The crew standing about, listening, cheered the consul and laughed at the sailor and the mutiny was over. The captain told Mr. Harris that he was afraid to go to sea with the crew. The Consul told him in American, to "go ahead, it is all right, you will have no trouble." The captain took the advice, sailed, and had no trouble on the voyage with his crew. Mr. Harris will return in a few weeks to his duties in Nagasaki.

- II. Growth of conscience.
- A. Parallelism between the individual and the race.
 1. Selfish.
 2. Sympathetic.
 3. Altruistic.
- B. Final development.
- III. How strengthened.
- IV. Effect of conscience.
 1. At what age does conscience first appear?
 2. What changes, if any, take place in conscience at the period of adolescence?
