Fighting Lizards

The ring-necked lizard of the Arizona deserts is not a mere devourer of weaklings. He is always ready to fight, whether he is challenged by another or cornered by a man. When brought to bay in some hole, he opens his jaws, and dashes bravely out, snapping at everything which opposes him and so fierce and sudden is his rush that it is impossible to face it without flinching. By holding two of these lizards loosely by the small of the back and allowing their heads to clash as they struggle to escape, one may be able to induce combats such as must occur every day in the desperate lizard world.

Forgetting that they were captives, they would seize upon each other and vent their thwarted rage to the utmost in a fight which but for timely interference would doubtless lead to the death of one or the other. Such bulldog pugnacity is rather unlooked for in lizards, but a student of character could easily read in the set jaw and pouched throat of this species the signs of fighting blood.—Country Life.

Clara—Their courtship was so romantic.

Belle—Yes; most of it happened during an automobile breakdown—ten miles from a repair shop.

May—Our links are the best in the country.

Belle—Why?

They are so rough that a chaperon simply can't follow one around.

MASCAGNI COMING TO AMERICA

Pietro Mascagni, the famous composer, sails from Cherbourg for the United States September 27th. He has composed a hymn to America in which he tries to express his admiration for the new world. During his stay in America he will make an extended tour at the head of a grand opera company in which he will personally conduct the rendition of his operas. Lincoln is in his bookings for at least one performance.
